So, when a single Congress appropriates $10,200,000,000 during one session, as did the last one, the man on the job—the taxpayer and voter—is the one who will ultimately dig up the money to pay the bill.

It makes no difference how well the politicians camouflage their taxraising schemes as assessments against the wealthy, as inheritance taxes, intangible taxes, excise taxes, special taxes or what-not, the laboring men and women will feel the effect in higher prices, higher rents, depressed business, fewer jobs, lower wages or actual lack of employment.

Tax money does not grow on trees. It comes out of the pockets of the people. You can't "soak" a corporation without "soaking" the consumer, and you can't "soak" the consumer without "soaking" the corporation—in both cases you "soak" the buying power of the nation and tend to cause depression and stagnation.

ROADS

The people of the United States, according to the American Farm Bureau Federation, have realized that the construction and maintenance of roads is an essential part of their economic development.

The taxpayers of the nation spend about $1,200,110,892 annually for building roads. During 1929, 25,971 miles of road were built and surfaced by state highway departments, and 26,324 miles by other agencies.

Perhaps no other public expenditure brings greater blessings and returns—both in the tangible form of greater comfort and convenience than money spent for roads. In times like the present road work is of particular value, in that it not only benefits the communities where developments are underway, but in that it is a sound way of relieving unemployment, stimulating business, and putting money into circulation.

However, it must be remembered that no road work should be undertaken without the greatest care and study. There have been too many miles of "political" road built in this country. Those entrusted with the spending of highway funds should give every effort to bringing their territories the greatest possible mileage of improved road that the budget will allow. They should work to keep a fair relation between mileage of high-type main highway and inexpensive, but serviceable, secondary, farm-to-market roads. Otherwise, waste will be the inevitable result.

"SAVING THE RAILROADS"

Writing in Collier's Weekly, John T. Flynn, associate editor of that magazine, says that saving the railroads is a major national problem. "It is a problem," he states, "which affects the investments of a million people, the jobs of a million and a half men and women directly and as many more indirectly, and the servicing of countless industries which cannot otherwise exist."

Mr. Flynn points out that railroad net earnings increased between 1921 and 1929, at a time when gross earnings were steadily declining. This was accomplished by decreasing expenses. A tremendous drive against inefficiency and waste was carried out, with the result that the lines established an amazing record for service per dollar received. The railroads have managed to haul about 20 per cent more traffic with 20 per cent less operating expense.

But the time has been reached, according to rail executives, when it is impossible to further cut operating expense. Further savings can be effected only at the expense of service. And thus the problem of "saving the railroads" arises.

The main question, of course, is, how? Mr. Flynn says that there are only two ways—by getting more business or higher rates. There are great obstacles in the path of either course. The best though of the nation is now needed to save one of the most essential of all industries from disaster.

THE SAFETY IDEA

"The law has contributed to a certain extent to make industry safe," said Alfred E. Smith recently, "but all regulatory statutes have a life where they stop. It is at this point that human and personal endeavor must take up the undertaking."

"Human and personal endeavor" has made remarkable progress in advancing safety, particularly in large industries such as the railroad and the electric, but it still has a long way to go. In small manufacturing businesses in many lines accident rates are far beyond what the "normal" should be. Industrial accidents run into a gigantic "waste" item in our business records.

This is not altogether the fault of the businesses themselves. Great steps have been taken in guarding machinery and in making plants more safe mechanically. But the maximum safety results from the absorption of the "accident prevention idea" by the individual worker. He must develop an innate consciousness, that

Every State Now Has Some Angoras

IF YOU are accustomed to think of the angora goat as one of those queer "fertile anomalies" that you would have to go abroad to see in the native land, it may come with surprise to learn that there are more angora goats right here in the United States than in any other country in the world and that the annual mohair clip from this side of the water is the largest in the output of mohair, the fine wool of the angora.

The year '30 which saw the great cash crop in California also was the occasion for the entry of nine more specimens lonegrams, the first angora goats to be brought into this country. Producers they found their surround ings congenial, for they throve and multiplied and sent for a lot of their relatives to join them, until now there are forty three and a half million of these curling creatures here, increasing grain yield, and at the same time producing the finest fiber for fabrics of luxury and comfort nearly every State in the Union has at least a few members of the family, but the great bulk is centered in Texas, Arizona, Oregon, New Mexico, California and Missouri.

Mohair or angora fleece must not be confused with wool. Mohair is more stronger than wool, very lustrous and due to its unusual difference in cell structure does not keep clean. Mohair has many uses for clothing, draperies, rugs and other domestic applications but by far its most significant uses are for furniture and motor upholstering, for which it is made up into a plain fabric called mohair velvet, a sometimes velour for short. Twelve million yards of this fabric are in use in passenger trains today, due to its extreme durability resulting from pleasing appearance and luxurious drape, while over a hundred million yards are used annually on the sidewalks in the form of automobile upholstery.

Quite all of the angora is used for making gloves, while the meat, called chevon, is much like lamb or mutton. But, of course, by far the most important one of the angora goat's by-products is the milk yet probably not on every time you take out your ear

MOTOR RATTLE IS FOE TO HEALTH

No less an authority than Edward Francis Harrison, director of the Noise Abatement Commission of New York, gave out a statement recently warning the public against the evils of noisy, rattling automobiles.

According to Mr. Brown, noise injures nonexpert and the nervous system and that excessive noise causes deafness, nervous disorders and sometimes sudden death. "A person might just as well go for a ride with Typhoid Mary or some other typhoid carrier," said Mr. Brown "as ride in a car which rattles, rumbles or squeaks. Any people realize that a noisy automobile makes more racket than a thunder storm and can be heard for a mile or miles."

Although not generally known, a number of oil companies have been actively at work to remove the noise menace from automobiles. Not long ago a company's scientists developed a crack-proof motor oil, the principal characteristic being that it makes a noisy motor run quieter.

And to follow this, grease companies have developed a grease which while lubricating efficiently at the same time cause all squeaks and rattles to disappear.

Thus, in fighting the noise menace, the oil companies are obviously contributing to the life of an automobile and according to themselves at least are making the lives more harmonious of motoring a comfort even beyond that afforded by luxuriously appointed automobiles, all in addition to the pleasure given by high powered sport cars.

WORLD OF ROMANCE IN ORDINARY THINGS

There is a world of romance in the ordinary things about us to which most of us remain oblivious throughout our lives. Who, for example, would suspect it is so common a product as cast iron pipe? Yet it is there in abounding measure.

Cast iron pipe brings us that priceless boon—water. And it brings us gas to cook our food and heat our homes. On account of its uncanny resistance to rust and disintegration no better medium has ever been discovered for transporting gas and for bringing water from the source to our kitchens and bathrooms and garden hose. It does its work silently and perfectly while generations of mankind live their little lives above it and pass on. It outlasts us by centuries.

Back 267 years ago a French engineer, at kingly command, built an ingenious fountain in the gardens of Versailles. To carry the water for their enchanting sprays he used cast iron pipe which now, two and a half centuries later, is still serving its original purpose.

In 1801, the city fathers of Philadelphia began a fifteen year study of water supply methods and materials. As a result they adopted cast iron pipe and tried it out. The Quaker City's pipe has been ransacking thirsts and bringing cleanliness now for 113 years.

All over America, in hundreds of cities, ancient cast iron pipe is carrying its liquid and gaseous burdens as efficiently and uncomplainingly as on the day it was laid, despite the terrific road shocks of motor trucks and street railways.

Chattanooga's cast iron pipe, still serving, began its useful career during the agonies of the Civil War in 1863. Some of Richmond's mains are 181 years old. Exactly the same is true in St. Louis. The utility and durability of cast iron pipe mains are proved by the lengths of time some of the latest installations have served their communities—Detroit 93 years, Louisville 83, Boston 82, Indianapolis 92, Memphis 91, New York 89, Brooklyn 87, Newark 83, Chicago 78, Atlanta 77, Nashville 77, Rock Island 76, San Francisco 70, Kansas City 68, Jacksonville 55 and Los Angeles 50.

Truly, romance's spell romance in a common product we don't know anything about the subject.

SUDDEN WEALTH NOT ALWAYS A BLESSING

The embarrassments and inconveniences of sudden wealth are scarcely realized by residents of Oklahoma City, who have witnessed the devastating effects on a community engulfed by a flowing tide of oil.

What sudden oil wealth does to one's friends and neighbors is vividly told in the current issue of the American Magazine by Mrs. Cora Miley Miley, who developed Oklahoma City for many years and has watched the golden gushers come in. From her cottage window at night she can see 900 oil wells, gay with their flamboyant strings of lights, illuminating like a blazing fairyland.

This new area, eight miles long and five miles wide, is perhaps the greatest oil field in the world, but Mrs. Miley's picture of it has an overpowering note of regret and pathos. "I remember vaguely how she says "when the landscape where the oil wells are now was a smiling place, quiet, rural, beautiful.

"Now all is a desert, a fiery furnace. The lilies and honeysuckle are broken and covered with grime.

"People here have stumbled, often accidentally, on the shining, dimpling rainbow's end, the pot of gold. It is happening every day. Men and women find themselves enormously rich over night. Before the black, slick, sticky flood of oil came upon us we had lived peaceably, contentedly. We built houses, tamed the soil. Now I begin to wonder whether after all the black flood really has brought happiness to the people of my city.

"There are so many things that money cannot buy. For all the blessings which petroleum has brought to the world, the stream of liquid gold does not assay 100 per cent pure gold. Too often greed controls the game,—not a noble greed that takes pride in a genius, but a bestial greed that sets aside integrity, honor, the quality of fair play, and the rights of others."

POLITICS CAN DISCOURAGE PRIVATE INITIATIVE

A striking example of how politics discourages industry, is witnessed in Oregon, which recently went through the convulsion of a campaign involving the enactment of legislation to encourage public ownership and development of power.

In spite of every honest endeavor, the California-Oregon Power Company was blocked from completing a large development on the Klamath River in Southern Oregon on which it claims to have made a preliminary expenditure of $309,000, and which involved a further immediate expenditure of $4,000,000, and an ultimate $21,000,000.

The company has now filed an application with the Federal Power Commission for a site just a few miles across the California line from the point at which it would have built in Oregon, and it is welcomed with open arms by California citizens.

This means that Oregon will lose a great new industry, a big payroll and, according to the attorney for the company, $100,000 a year in taxes.

Politics discourages private initiative and enterprise whenever it attacks investment in any line. States with back-breaking loads of taxation, can ill afford to drive out old industries or prevent new ones from locating within their borders.

Workmen and taxpayers are always the greatest sufferers in such situations. Years of constructive work required to secure investments and industries can be undone in the beat of a single election.

When a great industry is induced to come into any state, many individuals, commercial clubs, etc., like to claim credit for the accomplishment.

When such a great industry is forced to leave a state, which of its citizens will accept responsibility for creating the conditions which cause the loss?

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Clutterbuck

Lieut. Col Brainerd Taylor, in charge of the motor transport branch of the U. S. Army, testified recently before the Interstate Commerce Commission in connection with hearings on the question of consolidation of motor and rail transportation and said:

"Whatever is done in the way of federal coordination and regulation, should be done with national defense in view. The use of a railroad system is the backbone of our national and international commerce and of our national defense, and all other forms of transport are for us but extensions and auxiliary services, none of which should be permitted in any way, shape, or manner to weaken or retard the development of a national system of arterial railways. The present trend wherein railroad organization appears to be forced by competition to develop motor transportation in connection with their own railroads, instead of competing with them, is indifferent, harsh, impolitic; you never forget the number of times you whose "hello girl" says it with chewing gum.

The small of it there has to be a moral.) Our own telephone voices use and the stake toward the success the future of our business. Into each telephone conversation we can put courtesy, friendliness, pleasantness and be it officially in song that powerful instrument for good, when used pleasantly, the voice.

In the course of the trial the judge turned to the negro woman on the stand and asked:

"How old are you?"

"Ise seventy-three, judge."

"Are you sure?"

"Yaas, suh."

"Mandy, you don't look seventy-three."

"I'se sure, judge."

After a few moments the trial was interrupted by Mandy.

"Judge, I'se mistaken about my age being seventy-three; that's my best measure, suh."—Cheese and Crackers.

railroads asked that they be given on an equal opportunity to compete with other forms of transportation and that there be proper and appropriate regulation of such competitors for the purpose of stabilizing transportation service and securing effective coordination.

Railroad transportation is admittedly essential to the public welfare, protection and economic development. National prosperity and safety depends on it. Railway transportation ranks second only to agriculture as an industry in this country and naturally has a material effect on the prosperity of this nation, not only because of the large purchases of materials, supplies and equipment made annually, but also because of the dependence upon economical and efficient transportation to American industry.

Looking at the transportation question from a purely palliative and practical standpoint alone, it is in the public interest to weaken the ability of the railroads to function efficiently and gradually because of failure to permit the roads to continue to compete on a fair basis with the other agencies of transportation, creating the conditions which cause the loss."

Col Taylor is right in urging federal coordination and regulation of all agencies of common carrier transportation.

The Story of a Famous MOTHER

Whistler's Painting of His Mother

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ONE of the greatest American pictures, perhaps THE greatest American picture, portrays a mother placed on one side of a portrait which is called "Arrangement in Gray and Black." It was the portrait of an old woman, who in a black gown and white head cap, a woman in the eight and seventy eighths of age, sitting sidewise with quiet hands clasping and resting. It was the portrait of the painter's mother.

This picture, known as "The Mother," would have assured its creator of immortality if he had never painted another. More than five million reproductions of it have been printed and these prints have gone to every corner of the earth. University the woman in the picture is the embodiment of motherhood. Mrs. Anna Matilda McNeill Whistler, the mother of James McNeill Whistler, has come to be the model of motherhood, the epitome of what every love whose memory we honor on May 10—Mother's Day.

But even though her picture has achieved immortality, the mother herself is relatively unknown. Nearly every one has something about the erratic genius who was her son. But few know anything more of the woman who gave him to the world. This book is the story of Anne Matilda McNeill Whistler.

It was in the year 1799 that a Scotch family named McNeill came to America from the isle of Skye. Long before the Revolution one of the line, Donald McNeill, built a great brick mansion on a plantation near the Cape Fear river in North Carolina and there the McNeills took root. Most of them were planters and shipowners and all Tories—not to say loyal.

Anne Matilda McNeill was the eldest of five children in her father's family. Her mother died when she was a young girl and she had practical duties forced on her early when she became mistress of the ancient house of McNeill of Dungon and three younger sisters and one brother looked to her for care and guidance. This brother became Maj. Wilmon Gibbs McNeill of the United States army and he was a family of planters and physicians and the last of his clan.

While he was a cadet at the United States Military academy at West Point he brought home with him one day as a classmate named George Washington Whistler. This classmate came of a family not at all unlike the interesting history than that of the McNeills. His grandfather was Capt. John Whistler, born in Ireland of an old Scottish family, who ran away from home and entered the British army. He came to America during the Revolution. With the troops under Burgoyne and was captured by the Americans at Saratoga. He returned to England after the Revolution, he was discharged from the army, but he kept with the designs of one of his father's friends, stayed with him and came a second time to America, settling in Shepherdstown, Va. (Now he joined the American army in the war on the frontier of the old Northwest and at the outbreak of the War of 1812 was with General Hull's army at Detroit, which was surprised by the British under Brock and he subsequently surrender. So Whistler had the unique distinction of having once been a prisoner of war captured by the Americans and then an American officer captured in the British.

But Gen. George Washington Whistler's greatest distinction lies in the fact that he was the first "father of a bridge." For it was he who built the first Erie railroad in 1837 and commanded the garrison there until 1838. His eldest daughter was famous Harriet Winslow and was married in 1801 to James Abbott, a trader, thus becoming Chicago's first belle. His youngest son, a youngster of only three years when Whistler came to build Fort Dearborn, was named George Washington Whistler and it was on the shores of Lake Michigan that he grew to sturdy boyhood.

At the age of nineteen he was graduated from West Point, was assigned to the artillery corps and for several years was engaged in engineering and topographical work. Also he was married and soon a widower, but early in the '30s he spoke one the motherly elder sister of his classmate, William Gibbs McNeill, and married her. In 1835 he resigned from the army and the next year to George Washington Whistler and Anna Matilda McNeill Whistler was born the son to whom was given the name James Abbott McNeill Whistler, thus perpetuating the name of his uncle, James Abbott, as well as his paternal and maternal families, the McNeills and the Whistlers.

After Whistler's resignation from the army he rose to eminence as an engineer and in 1842 he went to Russia to assist the success of the work in the construction of the railroad from St. Petersburg to Moscow, winning for himself from Nicholas I., the Emperor of the Order of St. Anne. To Russia with him went his wife and their two sons, one of them a child, and, unfortunately known to her mother as "Jimmie" and "Jamie" he was to live to the end of her days, even when he became a world-famous painter. For the close friendship between the mother and the son who was to immortalize her an elective bond during his formative experience.

She passed him during those bitter years and when they were united in the drab of Lowell, Mass.—and when the widow and her two sons were reduced to poverty; she brought them out of the land of misery back to her sunny North Carolina. When "Jamie" grew up he clerked to follow the profession of his father and became a soldier. He secured an appointment to West Point in 1851, but his stormy home was a short one. In fact, it lasted only two years.

Came the day when he took a chemistry exam. Jamie. One of the questions was whether or her solution was a sodium gas. Whistler found it knew, so he guessed that it was. And he guessed wrong. That was only one of several questions to which he guessed wrong. So he was "found" and discharged from the academy for deficiency in chemistry.

There was, however, one study he chose to showed remarkable proficiency. That was in drawing, which was required of all cadets. Today the West Pointers study drawing of a very technical nature, but in his day it was more of the "art" stuff. But he made many creditable drawings and paintings of the rough and mountains, the lake and the shore where the cadets of the present receive their instruction in strategy and tactics of modern warfare. Of this he's work, along with those of Cadet Jefferson Davis, Cadet William Tecumseh Sherman and Cadet George C. Meade. In fact, the United States Military academy owns to-day Jim Whistler's "Whistlers."

After leaving West Point Whistler received a job for a drawer as a painter. So he went to Paris where he studied for two years and then proceeded to storm the international world of art by breaking away from tradition, by refusing to go where he was told to go and by using an experimentalism and an eclectic. Next he went to London and in 1859 began to exhibit in the Royal academy. He achieved fame as an etcher and a lithographer perhaps even greater than as a painter but his wife, to whom he was married, was a writer, a romantic wit and a persuasive conversationalist. Her greatest fame as the latter came after his death.

During those years he was rising to fame in London and in Europe also, but with him went waste, his mouth in case he should have need of her. For example her little "Jimmie" never seemed to grow up enough to be without his mother. In 1860 Whistler left London for three years more of study in Paris and his mother remained in London for a last visit with her relatives in North Carolina. For Whistler said decided never to return to his native land in case his mother agreed to wind up what few affairs she had there and then return to London. Then only would he live in the same country which she could provide.

While she was visiting in Connecticut and Rhode countries in North Carolina the storm of the Civil war broke. Communication with the war became more and more difficult as the Union blockade of the Confederate ports tightened. Finally she left Connecticut for her native land but she returned to London and established herself there. So she abandoned her intention of joining him. Her relatives tried to detain her, it would be impossible for her to go now, they said was. Her only reply was the calm statement that her "Jamie" needed her with him and that she was going.

Somehow she arranged it to take passage on the Confederate blockade runner, the Advance, which was preparing to leave Wilmington, N. C., taking 5,000 bales of cotton to the cotton mills in England—if the Advance could get through the Union fleet. Another passenger on the ship was William Leggo Hill, going on a mission from the Confederate government to London. He knew that he was taking a long chance of getting through alive, but the urgency of his mission permitted no delay.

The Advance stole out of the harbor one night under the cover of darkness. Outside was a squadron fleet of 150 Union vessels, concentrated there to prevent the escape of Confederate commerce, which was guarded by Fort Fisher. All night long those ships were on the guard of Fort Fisher, ready to go on a moment's notice with their eyes on the lights of the fort. The dark of those guns revealed the sails of the blockade runner to the Federal gunboats and the entire Union fleet opened up on the Confederate ship.

As for the location of the fleet another fact on the time when we are interest a short distance but the fact of so near as to employ a number of the Confederate crew had this to say: "While the Yankees were rushing to the attack we were getting ready to get through with their line. The sort of excitement when one shell landed to the rigging and solid that we knew neither was going to burst as well we were going to get through all right. That Minnie Hill, he was sort of jaded, but she wouldn't And get through they did, for by some miracle the Advance made her escape and arrived safely in England.

"It was in this fashion that Mrs. Anna Matilda McNeill Whistler left the gray coast behind and the most desperate woman of America, with both sides of her nature satisfied for the last time," writes Ben Dixon McNeill in the New York Herald Tribune Magazine. "Her last glimpse of the south of Dixie Fair from the ship which she was born, was limited by the glare of the Federal fleet in 1865 when, seventy six she left the ground of death through the blockade to a new home of happiness among strangers and to a new career of immortality.

In that one lonely compulsive hour those women might have put for themselves a sort of legendary renown. It is, in small, the problem Ben Dixon McNeill is the first mother. Suppose of sending the mother of the world's most famous painter to the Confederacy for a last visit with her relatives in North Carolina. For Whistler said decided never to return to his native land in case his mother agreed to wind up what few affairs she had there and then return to London. Then only would he live in the same country which she could provide.

While she was visiting in Connecticut and Rhode countries in North Carolina the storm of the Civil war broke. Communication with the war became more and more difficult as the Union blockade of the Confederate ports tightened. Finally she left Connecticut for her native land but she returned to London and established herself there. So she abandoned her intention of joining him. Her relatives tried to detain her, it would be impossible for her to go now, they said was. Her only reply was the calm statement that her "Jamie" needed her with him and that she was going.

Somehow she arranged it to take passage on the Confederate blockade runner, the Advance, which was preparing to leave Wilmington, N. C., taking 5,000 bales of cotton to the cotton mills in England—if the Advance could get through the Union fleet. Another passenger on the ship was William Leggo Hill, going on a mission from the Confederate government to London. He knew that he was taking a long chance of getting through alive, but the urgency of his mission permitted no delay.

THIS AND THAT

A piece of homemade candy is always a welcome addition to any meal.

Date Nut Fudge—Boil together one cupful each of granulated sugar and maple sugar, one tablespoonful of corn syrup, a few grains of salt, one cupful of water and three tablespoons of a thick syrup of evaporated milk. Boil and cook until it forms for the soft ball test. Remove from the fire and add one cupful of chopped dates and nuts. Beat until creamy and pour into a buttered pan. When cold cut into squares.

Maple Fudge—Boil together one cupful each of granulated sugar and maple sugar, one tablespoonful of corn syrup, a few grains of salt, one cupful of water and three tablespoons of a thick syrup of evaporated milk. Boil and cook until it forms for the soft ball test. Remove from the fire and beat until creamy and pour into a buttered pan. When cold cut into squares.

Pralines—Boil together one cupful each of granulated sugar and brown sugar, one tablespoonful of corn syrup, one cupful of cream and one cupful of water and a soft ball is formed. Remove from the fire and beat until creamy, add one cupful of pecan meats and drop from a teaspoon on to buttered paper or cool until it will not stick to the paper.

Chocolate Fudge—Melt four squares of unsweetened chocolate with three cupfuls of sugar, one-half cupful of milk and one tablespoonful of butter. Boil, stirring constantly and boil for three minutes, remove from the fire and add one teaspoonful vanilla and a teaspoonful of vanilla. Beat until thick. Add chopped nuts, pour into buttered pans. If desired, Fig Bars may be made without nuts or maple sugar and have a delicious flavor.

Bryce canyon has been described as a gorgeous exhibition of the most grand pictures and unusual scenery in the country in the United States. "The entire country becomes in a moment a wonderland, a fairy land, more like a dream than reality. The amphitheaters and pinnacles of Bryce have two distinctive features, the scenic of color, with every moment bringing forth a new picture, and the fantastic forms of the rocks. Bryce is the most picturesque example of the action of water in the formation of the earth's surface. Bryce is a vast amphitheater filled with many spires, pinnacles, towers and walls."

Bryce Canyon also owes its name to the Mormons who settled in the region in the early days. Ebenezer Bryce, a Mormon who settled in the region in the early days, gave his name to the canyon. Bryce has no water in the bottom of the canyon, but the Paria river flows through a valley not far away.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN GIRLS CONFERENCE

The Campfire Girls under the leadership of their guardian, Miss Helen Button and the Girl Scouts with their Captain, Miss Mary Lamont attended the Northern Michigan Girls Conference at the Gymnasium in Boyne City, Saturday, May 2nd. This was the first Girls Conference ever held in Northern Michigan and was voted by everyone a tremendous success. About 200 girls of Junior and Senior High Schools, organized and nine of our northern towns. Those girls belonged to Girl Scouts, Campfire Girl Scouts and Girls League groups.

The morning session of assembly with all groups present in the Rev. Smock's gym consisted mainly of all girls and leaders and then the address by Miss Beulah Bonner, dean of Women at Mt. Pleasant Normal College was given. Miss Bonner proved a delightful speaker to girls and her address was inspirational, instructive and helpful in many ways. After a delightful banquet at the Methodist Hotel the girls again met in the gymnasium for a few minutes of games and group meetings when the leaders met to discuss ways and means for organizing groups in their own girls this conference next year. Miss Burton of Charlevoix, Mrs. H. R. Schubert of Petoskey and Miss Jane Hammond of Boyne City were appointed as the committee to carry on future work in this district and some town should extend a welcome to the girls next year.

At the group meetings of the Girl Scouts and Campfire Girls from the various towns, the Charlevoix groups found much encouragement and cheer next year to add more girls to their groups if possible and they also felt a splendid start toward being girls of whom Charlevoix may well be proud. They are starting those activities that make for healthful, happy living unselfishness to their families and homes, and loving and living the highest ideals which they know.

IN AND ABOUT SCHOOL

A new bank is being written at present by several high school girls. The name of the bank is "How To Put Into Over." For further information inquire from Betty Carson, Kathleen McCall or Dorothy Griffin.

We wonder what has happened to our artist that used to fill the bulletin board with cartoons of the prominent men of today.

Report cards went out last Saturday; something else to remind us that we're just five more weeks at school, and so many things not to miss—J Hop, Senior Prom, and Exams.

We have had very good attendance this week, except for the snoops visits. Mr. North tells me that the weather has been so cold that he thinks the "spring fever" germs can't live.

Congratulations Seniors on the clever cravings cases you have presented to the school.

RESULTS OF BAND CONTEST

Another barrel for Charlevoix was won when the Band played first among the Class C bands of this district at the Music contest in Traverse City last Friday. That's one of the two bands competing under orchestrations, marched and made quarterfaces, by the old gate gone clubs and missed charm. Charlevoix entered a band, a mixed band, and won an orchestra. The woodwind quartette consisting of Hugh Parker, Esther Case, Ruby Simmons and Bill Dow won the second event honors by winning second place. Those who were contestants in the orchestra contest were among attending the contest had a very fine opportunity to enjoy a splendid program of music and to see what other communities are doing in band.

The members of the band are very grateful to Mr. Ter Vree, the director and are glad to know that he has also commissioned the members for Spring on one of his few directors present at the contest.

COMMERCIAL CONTEST

The Commercial Contest took place yesterday in Charlevoix in Charlevoix representatives were Dorothy Griffin and Lola Van Dusen for shorthand and in the team typing Lola Fessenden, Elaine Thomson, Lauretta Stoddard and Leonard Hook. All the girls did well and Charlevoix was awarded a certificate for proficiency in their typewriting.

DEBATERS TRIP

The Charlevoix debaters left for their trip to Ann Arbor for the purpose of attending the state championship debate, April 28.

The team, coach, Mrs. Dowd, and two of the debaters, Dorothy Staley and Virginia Nickerson, made the trip in Mrs. Dowds car. They left Wednesday night at 11:30 and made the trip by leaving by 5 hours and 18 minutes.

Thursday the two went sight seeing in Lansing and were taken through the state capitol. At noon they continued to Ann Arbor where "The Charm School" was presented by graduate actors in Hill Auditorium Thursday night.

A very interesting lecture by Dr. Angel, President of Yale University, was given Friday morning, after which he was presented the "Inglis Medal of Law" by the President of the U. of M.

A campus tour and a baseball game between Michigan and Colgate—Michigan being the victors—were the program for the afternoon.

Friday evening, May 1, the state championship debate was held in Hill Auditorium. Both teams did splendidly.

Saturday morning the debaters assembled to Detroit where they attended one of Shaw's plays in the afternoon at the Civic Theater.

The trio left for Charlevoix late Sunday morning.

SOME TESTED GOOD THINGS

There is an old saying that "an apple a day keeps the doctor away," and an apple a day keeps everybody away. A good time to indulge in the indestructible bully is at a time when you will not annoy others. Onions are such wholesome vegetables that one should be served at least twice a week in some form during the winter. An onion soup cannot be excelled for a cough, and a poultice of chopped raw onion, mixed with raw flour with a bit of vinegar to moisten, makes a remedy for the lung trouble. This is not pleasant, but is very effective.

Baked Stuffed Onions—This makes a most satisfying main dish. Peel and core the onions in boiling salted water for ten minutes. Take out the cores, drain well. Butter a small green pepper and remove the seeds, peel 12 large mushroom caps and a tomato. Add to these a tablespoonful of butter with the white scooped from the onions, finely chopped. Add another cupful of bread crumbs and pepper and a teaspoonful of salt of butter, and melt. Fill all the mushroom onions and top each with a mushroom cap. Put into a baking dish with a little water, cover and bake in a moderate oven about one hour. Remove the cover the last 15 minutes and brown. They are delicious served hot or cold with a bit of dressing.

Lemon Pudding—Mix one cupful of flour, two cup yolks well beaten, one lemon, juice and rind, one teaspoonful of melted butter, and one cupful of milk. When well blended fold in the well-beaten whites of the eggs and bake in a shallow round dish set into hot water. Bake three minutes. Serve hot or cold.

Walnut and Salmon Salad—Separate into flakes one-fourth of a cupful of canned salmon. Take equal cupfuls of walnut meats coarsely chopped, blend three-fourths of a cupful of salmon, let stand in cold water to crisp. Drain, mix the salmon and nuts, and one cupful of cooked salad dressing and serve on lettuce and you have something good.

Islands Now American

Wake Island was acquired by the United States in 1899 as a result of the Spanish-American war and was added to this country by reason of the treaty of Paris, which ended the war. Midway Islands are a part of the Hawaiian group, and under the jurisdiction of the Hawaiian government. The Midway Islands are 1,300 miles from the ship Gallatine on July 5, 1859, although they were not a possession of the same of the Pioneer Hawaiian group. In 1867 Captain Brooks of the U. S. S. Lackawanna, under instructions from commodore in the name of the United States in 1859 by an American named Nathan Hale, who first discovered the islands. Howland Island was discovered by George W. Worden in 1842, and officially possessed in the name of the United States in 1857.

Alaska's Old Capital

Sitka, Alaska, was the old Russian capital of Russian Alaska, and remained the capital of the new territory of Alaska when the American flag was hoisted there on October 18, 1867. There was very little government in Alaska for some time after its acquisition, and it was not until the act of August 24, 1912, that the territory was proclaimed an organized territory entitled to an election.

Women's Words

How's your vocabulary? Fred Henry M. Robinson of the American Magazine has figured out that the average girl with a grade school education uses between 1,200 and 2,000 words. With a high-school education she possesses 3,000 to 4,000. After a college education she commands anywhere from 6,000 to 12,000. Shakespeare, in the plays, employed 24,000 different words.

Water for Goldfish

A temperature between 50 and 60 degrees is best for goldfish. Avoid any sudden change in temperature. If water is above 85 degrees in morning watch the fish and if they seem distressed reduce the number of fish in each aquarium, and be sure the water is renewed. Do not put too in the water. Cooled water may be fed in gradually if temperature is dangerously high.

Commemorative Stamps

The number of commemorative stamps to be issued is specified by the Post office department. The number is not always the same, so there is a genuine demand for certain types of commemorative stamps.

Government's Good Work

Fifty million dollars is invested annually by the United States government in the investigation and improvement of new strains of fruits and grains.

Specializes in Diseases of Fish

James Palmer of the Walker home aquarium at Toronto, Ont., is said to be the only fish doctor in the world. He operates a hospital for sick fish in his home, His line of personal publicity is to go around with all the noise and assertiveness of a shadow. If you corner him, he will answer questions in a quiet voice and may even be induced to tell you how he happened to write some of his songs. But he is happiest if you put him in a room with a piano and just let him sit and play to himself. There may be a motor crowd in the room, but that doesn't disturb him. He just doesn't listen.

Critics make fun of novelties with less ten twenty upon the "song urn of relentlessly," but I can tell you a true story, which any novelist would consider too improbable to use. Walter Donaldson and John Golden had never met. As you may know, John Golden was a song writer before he became a theatrical producer. That he was a successful song writer is evidenced by the fact that his total royalties from "Over Normandy" amounted to about $30,000. Gene Buck, Ray Hubbell and other central friends were disturbed when Donaldson and Golden should be brought together. A tournament of the Artists and Writers' ball associations, held on long island, seemed to be an occasion on which the men could "" brought together.

But it happened that a play produced by John Golden, "That's Gratitude," written and played by Frank Craven, opened the evening of the day on which the tourn ament was held and Mr. Golden was so busy with various details that he couldn't get away. Consequently the tournament started without the presence of the star. Donaldson was in the majority about ten to one.

Walter Donaldson is a peculiar type for a song to his success. His idea of personal publicity is to go around with all the noise and assertiveness of a play was over. Big thousands of persons seemed to be in just as much of a hurry as Mr. Golden. Finally he managed to get out into the street with the crowd and then he sought earnestly for a taxicab. He hailed many only to discover that they were occupied. At last he sighted an empty one, only to have somebody beat him to it by a couple of steps. He hailed the first man driver to go by the Park from the first hotel. Without any more formality he said, "Drive me home." He slammed the door and scrambled inside.

"Hey, you!" exclaimed the first man in, "what's the big idea?"

"That's a minute," said Mr. Golden. "I've tried my best to get a cab. I heard you tell the driver, to go to the Park Central and I've got to get to my theater. Just a couple of blocks from there, in a hurry. I'm reciting a play there tonight. If you will let me ride with you, I'll pay for the cab or pay my share of it, whatever you prefer."

"What's your name?" said the man. "John Golden."

"Well," said the man, "you can ride. I've been hearing about you all day. I'm Walter Donaldson."

Mr. Donaldson and gone to the golf tournament, won it, and then came in to see the first one of a series of his songs. Of course, these two had picked the same cab. And critics talk about coincidence.

CARRIES OFF HONORS

To Rush Work on Federal Building

New York—To expedite building projects of the federal government recently published the assessment of Secretary Hurley that part of the government's construction program will utilize private architects. Heretofore practically all of this work has been done by the office of the government's supervising architect, which will continue to provide plans for projects less than $500,000 and the smaller standard jobs and all supervise all construction.

The department will continue to employ private architects in connection with the large projects where, it is written that the public building program will be expedited by so doing," says Mr. Hurley's statement.

Projects for which the limits of cost are fixed at less than $150,000 are to such a size and character that plans for certain buildings already constructed can be adapted to such projects. Considerable saving of time in the preparation of drawings and specifications for this reason projects of this character are generally handled by the office of supervising architect. Also, experience has shown that the plans for extension and remodeling problems can be handled more expeditiously in this office all data relating to the existing buildings being on file there."

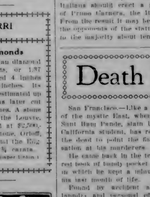
MANY-PURPOSE FROCK



THE DULL CHILD

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I have seen but few circumstances at one time or another when I was not embarrassed by the dull child. Sometimes I was sorry for him, sometimes I was irritated with him, sometimes I was bored, a period of boredom I have had to fight against and forgive and ashamed of myself for not being more tolerant and more frogpaced in my judgments. But I have had to the conclusion that these things to the parents of the young people concerned. I only know about such from the unpleasant and difficult task, but if so it was not for a moment; I have learned to say and believe the dull as frank, direct and sympathetic way as I could. The situation in which I have disliked the most was when such a conversation had to be made over the telephone. Telephones were never intended for the transmission of such personal messages.

The one thing which I have not yet found a satisfactory way of saying to a parent is that the child is dull, and the best and normally capable of telling the work which he has undertaken to do. I can announce frankly that the lad is lazy, indifferent, something to work; I can say that he has had failure and go into details as to what these failure are; that he has done so far that when he entered or left school or college he was not graduated; I have not yet found the courage to say that the child is incapable.

Fortunately, such cases are rare and they do offer at least definite the hopefulness that could drown out of the child before he finishes his education. He starts an institution to do himself rather than predetermined faults, and his failure would be the presence which he tastes to give his school. But there are many more pride and satisfaction blend the parents' eyes, where sympathy redirects keeps the child at school, and finally forces him into college. For the work of which he shows little interest nor ability. It is very hard on teachers, parents under such circumstances that there is not something endlessly sorted with child—the child who would be still more rapid advancement.

STRANGE AS IT SEEMS—By John Hix

Death Diary Reveals Tragic Secrets

San Francisco.—Like a roving spirit of the mystic East, whence he came, Sun Bun Fanda, state University of California student, has returned from the dead to solve the riddle of several murders in his neighborhood.

He came back in the text of a little note found in a lonely cabin in the mountains of Oregon, who explains that it will take him two years to complete the work in his cabin and that he does not expect to be heard from again.

For this reason students of the mystic East are generally bewildered by the note, which was found in the cabin. Also, experience has shown that the plans for extension and remodeling problems can be handled more expeditiously in this office all data relating to the existing buildings being on file there."

Behind the accident among skilled laundry and personal efforts he left with a friend the night before he vanished, the blood red book was tucked away in the cabin. Mystery in the county as the possible solution to the unknown some people the longer it takes us to express our opinion of them. Guess that's human nature.

fourteen other murders of his room mystery that have baffled state, county, and city police officers for months, Sheriff McVay believes.

Beginning January 1, 1931, it contains a daily record of Fanda's comings and goings and names some of his friends. The last of Dickson Singh, held in jail in Sacramento for the student's murder, appears, presumably, the sheriff said.

He thinks the authorities rifled these last writings of the slain man after they refused to divulge details of the contents. It is being closely guarded and will be held until released by the district attorney.

That Fanda was close on the heels of the Hindu murder suspects, officers are convinced. It was his relentless pursuit of the slayers that prompted them to kidnap him and throw Sheriffs officials into a frenzy of search. Fanda was finally found in a tractor wheel, according to Harmon S. Martin, chief of the state bureau of criminal identification.

Coincident with the finding of the diary, McVay also learned of a plan to kidnap Selby Singh, president of the East India corporation. Shortly after one o'clock in the morning, recently, a car containing Singh and two Pacific Heights residents, all of his boat works, is composed of 1,000 pieces of wood.

Royal Barge Preserved

The Lagrah royal barge has been chosen to the new National Maritime museum at Greenwich. The barge was built in 1699 for King William III, and has since been used by nearly every sovereign of England. The last time it was used was in the Thames pageant in 1918.

Latin is History

Latin was banished as a writing about the Sixth century B. C., by the use of the Sixth century B. C., by the use of the alphabet derived from the Greek alphabet of the town of Cumae, in southern Italy. Latin became a literary language during the Third and Second centuries B. C.

From the Latin

The word nasturtium comes from two Latin words meaning "nose" and "to turn" and allusion to its pungent taste, causing one to make a wry face.

Machines That Are Almost Human

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Thought Transmitter

DO YOU believe in mental telepathy—in the power of one individual to transfer his thoughts to the brain of another, without speaking the word?

Johnson has approached such a phenomenon. A device has been perfected that enables speech, not thought, to be projected into a chosen brain by the mere pointing of a finger. Only the person selected to hear it can hear the speech. In a crowded room, no one else can hear what the speaker has to impart to his chosen hearer.

Johnston's call the device a thought transmitter, however, since it is the speaker's thoughts that are transmitted, although they are put into the form of words before they are conveyed to the other person.

In any vast crowd developed by an immense device, it is possible for an operator of the electrostatic projection machine to put words into the ear of a chosen subject merely by grasping the handle of the machine and pointing the finger at the ear of the subject.

The device has been demonstrated to scientists and others throughout the country by Sergius P. Grace, assistant to the president of the Bell Telephone laboratories. His uncanny demonstrations consist of rigs of powerful engineers and industrial leaders in New York and Chicago.

At the New York demonstration Dorrie Grace looked up the machine, grasped a handle and pointed a forefinger at the subject's ears. The latter, in the room below, received the fact that this was merely a demonstration. No one else in the room heard the speech.

In Chicago, Dorrie Grace, before the Chicago industrial engineers' association, spoke into a telephone transmitter and by means of a loud speaker his talk could be heard all over the room. While he was speaking a part of the current used was shunted in a "delay" circuit, and part of the speech was put through one.

After being stored four and a half seconds, this electrical current was transformed to high voltage and passed into Dorrie Grace's body. At this stage in his demonstration, Dorrie Grace stepped to the edge of a number of the audience, who then swung slowly in his hands the same electrical current. Dorrie Grace then spoke into the telephone a few minutes, afterward.

Outside of the Monroe farm four or five young skeletons were grouped. Others moved forward out of the darkness and greeted them casually. He had seen a bottle passing from one to another, but at sight of the sheriff

"Why, no. What makes you think so?"

"I've been sleeping on his trail for four days. He's either here, or he's heading this way."

"You sure?"

"Not sure, Buck. But he told me he'd be here."

"Told you?" Reagan's forehead knotted in a frown. "How an' doh gettin' to be a habit from then?"

"Listen, Buck. I've got to have some sleep. In forty-eight hours I've hardly had a wink—been in the saddle tossing through drifts most of the time. I don't want it known I'm in town. While I sleep find out for me if Jarrett is here. I also want to be able the two Kentucky horses of my partner. If the horses are in town I ought not to be hard to locate them. But may be staying at the home of Sharrod Gomez. They say him is how with Dolores. Not likely he'll stay at the Gomez place, though. He's too wily for that. Find out what you can, but be careful. I don't want him to get a hint of what I'm after. When you get him spotted wake me. If I'm asleep."

Buck Reagan was a member of the Texas Cattle Men's Association and had been asked on the main street of Comalita a little more than a year before this time. In the hotel he recognized a brother member of the outlaw band that had raided the Bar Double U ranch. He had overheard the fact that this was merely a demonstration. No one else in the room heard the speech.

In Chicago, Dorrie Grace, before the Chicago industrial engineers' association, spoke into a telephone transmitter and by means of a loud speaker his talk could be heard all over the room. While he was speaking a part of the current used was shunted in a "delay" circuit, and part of the speech was put through one.

After being stored four and a half seconds, this electrical current was transformed to high voltage and passed into Dorrie Grace's body. At this stage in his demonstration, Dorrie Grace stepped to the edge of a number of the audience, who then swung slowly in his hands the same electrical current. Dorrie Grace then spoke into the telephone a few minutes, afterward.

Outside of the Monroe farm four or five young skeletons were grouped. Others moved forward out of the darkness and greeted them casually. He had seen a bottle passing from one to another, but at sight of the sheriff relinquished the situation over. It was decided to levy no incompetents warrant on the Double Arrow brand. The sheriff would be content with the seizure of the Steelman steers. Probably Jarrett would ride off out until night. After dark the Gomez house was also to be kept under observation.

"If his gang is here with him some of the hands will probably have their noses in the trough," Reagan said. "They were knowledges of the silkenly traitors of justice as worked out by the outlaw race.

Cliffs resisted into the building. The sounds of cleaning him and the strains of the music filled the house. Most of these seemed were discordant, and old not offensive from but the music sounded were the most expressive. Reagan knew the latter was the music they were hearing. Gringos were not welcome, especially officers of the law.

The sheriff refused to incriminate himself by any such confession. He grinned and frankly thought it was a little almost amused. His eyes were already searching for the man he had come to find. The first person he saw was Sharrod Gomez. He was dancing with a slender young woman to the caresses of a violin. The sheriff sighted the wall were his father and mother, the latter wearing a mantilla. Jose Garcia was on the floor in the room were two Hindu women. Both of them were young.

A shift in the position of the dancers brought Dolores and her partner into the foreground. Obviously Dolores' dance required but a moment of attention. He was in evidence had stepped forward and a short conversation followed. Jarrett and a wife red nose was fired rightly to his feet. From the corners of his eyes he almost guessed that gallant a calm young man. He saw him look down at the top through the fingers of the dance fearlessly, as though he took no thought of danger. Jarrett's face he was not abashed when he made a slight mistake in the steps and stepped on the toe of his partner. A smile of the assenting fear and a quick nod of the head. Jarrett's face

THINK IT OVER

Recently a bill was introduced in the California Legislature for the purpose of amending the Constitution of that state so as to tax publicly owned utilities on the same basis as privately owned utilities. The bill is largely supported by farm groups who state that freedom from taxation in cities adds to the tax burden of rural areas, where the so-called "benefits" of government-owned utilities are not enjoyed.

The opposition, of course, comes from the advocates of government ownership of business. They claim there is no more reason for taking a government subsidy than for taking the army and navy. But the fact that the army and navy fit in no way compete with private citizens is comfortably overlooked. Government is tax-free because its service are for All the people. When it steps out of its proper sphere of governmive, and enters a business that can be patronized by only a portion of the taxpayers, there is not a single valid argument why that business should be tax-free. . . . Against practically all the destructive contingencies that assail life or property, health, or security against disaster, insurance is the ready and the strong protective.

In other words, fire insurance is the cornerstone of all business, of all social and industrial existence and progress. Without the protection afforded by insurance, the modern world as we know it, could not exist. The builder, the investor, the employer would be constantly facing appalling and ruinous hazard that could, in a few minutes time, wipe out the work of years. American and world civilization owe a tremendous debt to the institution of insurance.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS PLANS

That the League of Nations is planning a busy summer schedule of international legislation is evidenced by a series of official circulars just received in Washington, requesting the presence in Geneva of delegates from all American organizations interested in calendar reform.

Two gold-plated meetings to deal with this subject will be held in Geneva during the next six months. The first will be a "Preparatory Conference," beginning June 8; the other will be a "General Conference," beginning October 25.

It is hoped that by the end of the second meeting, the League of Nations will be in a position to give its approval to a definite scheme of calendar simplification, which can then be put into effect throughout the civilized world as rapidly as individual nations can pass the necessary legislation.

The international meetings will seek to decide two distinct questions,—first, whether calendar reform is desirable; and second, what type of reform should be approved. American delegations will be divided between supporters of the revolutionary 13-month calendar, and those who advocate the retention of a 12-month year with certain modifications to remedy the deficiencies of the present calendar. The latter group have a wife following also in Germany, France and other countries. In the United States the 12-month improved calendar plan, known as the World Calendar," is sponsored by the World Calendar Association, 485 Madison Avenue, New York City.

All questions of a purely religious character are to be ruled out of the Geneva discussions. "Such questions must be left to the religious authorities concerned," the official circular states.

WHO'S TO BLAME

President Hoover has repeatedly said that Congress is making excessive appropriations. On the other hand the Senate blames Hoover for everything that goes wrong in and out of Washington—and usually gets away with it. Now Senator Borah says that the Federal Government is "most wasteful" and "most inefficient" because the Government bureaus are extravagant and are constantly importuning Congress to make longer appropriations.

Perhaps those different schools of thought may be able to get together on plans for greater economy in the Government service. The taxpayers wouldn't kick.

GOVERNMENT PAY RAISES REFUSED

Heads of the Government Departments in Washington have refused the requests that have been made for increases in the rate of pay of employes in the public service, on the ground that the current economic conditions are such that present salaries of Government employes represent an increased buying power which is equivalent to an increase in pay.

IT MUST BE A GOOD POLICY

Playing big brother to Latin America is rather a difficult role for Uncle Sam, who has done his best in Nicaragua, Haiti, Santo Domingo, etc. But it must be believed that we have been doing a pretty good job because some of the Senators who have always criticized everything that Hoover Stimson have done, have joined in praise of the new State Department policy.

VISIONING NEW RAILROAD SERVICE

For many years prior to the World War railroads were the subject for abuse by politicians and demagogues. For several years after the war and up to 1929, due to economies and exceptional management, their earnings increased. Their securities became popular and they obtained needed money for improvements by sale of stocks.

The present depression, coupled with new methods of competition, have caused some people to think that the railroads are now ready to go the way of the horsedrawn cab and the streetcar.

The thoughtful person can see that this pessimistic picture is overdrawn. It is true that the railroads have new conditions with which to deal but figures show that 80 per cent of their traffic is still not competitive and that they are the backbone of the nation's transportation system.

Leading railroad executives are exerting their energies to bring about a new era of prosperity through coordination of transport—rail, highway, water and air. Such systems are already visioned and progressive roads are definitely moving in that direction. Federal and state cooperation is necessary in a final adjustment.

With an investment of 25 billion dollars in the railroads of the country, government and industry cannot afford to by without taking a hand in this vital problem.

THE JOKER

The Jackson, Mississippi, Daily News recently commented editorially on the frantic effort that is being made to inject the "power trust" into the next presidential campaign. It took the Muscle Shoals proposition as an example and said:

"It is high time that the people of the United States tear away the political camouflage and see revealed the plain facts concerning that proposed power venture over in Alabama." It went on to show that Muscle Shoals has cost American taxpayers $185,000,000 and that, at four per cent interest on this sum, the taxpayers are continuing to put up $5,320,000 in interest each year whereas the government is getting in return a revenue of $250,000 a year from its investment, out of which it spends $67,000, leaving a balance of $183,000 a year.

Socialistic schemes are always advanced "in the interest of the people" who are asked to join the crusade to put private enterprise (themselves) out of business.

Then comes the joke! The "dear people" are left to pay all the bills.

The proponents of socialism slide out from under all financial responsibility and generally attach themselves to a fat public salary which comes out of the pockets of the taxpayers who experience no fat bee shown, receive a return restricted personal rights and enlarged public debts—as evidence of this, look over increased taxation after every orgy of spending by a legislative body.

CUTTING DOWN MOTOR ACCIDENTS

The licensing of motor car drivers after examination and test is a practical step in the direction of reducing the number of motor vehicular accidents in this country. The States which have the mandatory examination and driving test for prospective drivers are Arizona, California, Connecticut, Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and West Virginia as well as the District of Columbia.

The States which prescribe "licenses" without the mandatory examination and driving test, or making them optional with traffic authorities, are using them chiefly for revenue raising purposes, are Indiana, Maine, Michigan, Nebraska, South Carolina, Washington and Wisconsin.

The rate of accident increase in the States which licenses drivers by examination and test has been 29 per cent less than during the same time in the States which do not license drivers.

ANNUAL REPORT OF CHILDREN'S FUND OF MICHIGAN

Two years ago Senator Cussen's appropriated ten million dollars to use to promote the health, happiness, welfare and general development of children in Michigan primarily, and elsewhere in the world. This fund was named the Children's Fund of Michigan, and the Trust required that the Secretary give an annual report.

The Second Annual Secretary's Report of the Children's Fund shows the vast amount of work that is being carried on by this organization among the children of Michigan.

During the second year of the Fund's existence (April 30, 1930 to May 1st, 1931) appropriations were made of $1,166,924.48. The work has centered in four major divisions: Child Health, Child Guidance, Research and Dependency. Of these Child Health Division under the direction of Dr. Bernard W. Carey has received the greatest emphasis, there now being 102 workers in different sections of Michigan. They examined and directly helped something over 100,000 children during the year and indirectly influenced many more.

Dental Program

The largest volume of work was done in months by the staff of 22 dentists and 4 oral hygienists additional dentists, 7 in all, heads of the children of 35 counties in Michigan, and 2 suburban districts in the Detroit area, were added to the staff. The dental services the requirements have been that there should be a county nurse, or some other type working in the county to assist the dentist, and to follow through his recommendations, and adequate office space be provided; and that a committee of responsible people should be found to advise and cooperate with the dentist sent to the county. Going from school to school inspections were made of the children's teeth. Those in need of correction were referred to local dentists, unless they were indigent, in which case the Children's Fund dentist made the needed corrections.

The regular staff made 75,451 examinations, gave prophylaxis to 17,558 children, inserted 42,870 fillings, and made 21,070 extractions.

The dental service was augmented during the summer months by a special relief program limited entirely to indigent children in 13 additional counties. 3,845 children received this attention.

County Nursing Program

The county nursing program through which the Children's Fund gives the services of a public health nurse to county health organizations in certain counties hitherto without such services, has not changed materially in the second year, except in size and volume of work. Thirty-three nurses are now in the service of the Children's Fund, and at present in 29 thirty-two counties. County committees of local citizens act as an important part of this work. Through them knowledge of child health practices is spread widely.

While school health still holds the major position in the program, the importance of physical instruction and medical supervision as well as of the proper feeding and care of infants and pre-school children, is clearly recognized.

Inspections given school children last year numbered 40,472. Visits numbering 16,006 have been made in the homes of infants, preschool and school children.

Consolidated County Health Units

The following counties: Cass, Ottawa, Shiawassee, Tuscola, Monroe, Ionia, Allegan, Van Buren, Gratiot, Antrim and Otsego Unit No. 1 consists of the counties of Cheboygan, Presque Isle, Montmorency and Alpena.

The purpose of the Consolidated County Health Unit is to show that it is practicable for counties with limited taxable resources to maintain health district for the welfare of their children. Supervisors of each cooperating county vote to join a health district and appoint two or three of their members to a district board of health. The Children's Fund finances a staff composed of a Health Officer, the needed number of nurses, a dentist, and a sanitary inspector. This staff attacks the problem of child mortality and child morbidity along along the line. Inspection of school children, mouth inspection, improvement in sanitary conditions of schools of water and milk supplies, control of communicable diseases, and attention to individual needs of individual children are among the things done.

Assistance and support from the district boards of health has been extremely encouraging. Milk ordinances have been under consideration by several communities, and in one instance, has been adopted.

Infant and Prenatal Classes

During the first half of the year the two women physicians engaged in the prenatal and infant's classes in series of six weeks each including as topics, prenatal care, infant care, the preschool child, food for the family, child management and training, and home hygiene.

In October a new type of program was introduced which combined mothers' classes and health examinations, and lengthened the period of service of the health educationist to three months in a county. The new program has included some work in tuberculin testing and in immunization.

The physicians have worked in 12 counties during the year. In addition to reaching directly 3,000 children, they have conducted 365 classes with a total attendance of 5,793.

Program for the Correction of Visual Defects

Finding that many children in the more sparsely settled rural regions have defective vision, not likely to be corrected, which handicaps them in school and in life, the Children's Fund has engaged a staff of ophthalmologists who go from county to county giving examinations and prescribing the needed corrections. The program, has been in operation for about seven months. During that time 1,886 children have been examined, and 1,005 pairs of glasses procured.

Northern Michigan Children's Clinic

During the year now closing the Northern Michigan Children's Clinic Building has been in the process of construction on land leased from St. Luke's Hospital, Marquette. The building is now completed and will begin its service to the children of the Upper Peninsula in May. This project represents a cooperative undertaking involving the University of Michigan Post Graduate Medical Department, St. Luke's Hospital and the Children's Fund. The Clinic will furnish specialists in medical and surgical treatment of children's diseases, who will call only from sick children brought in from all parts of the peninsula by the county and city nurses, but will also instruct the practitioners of the area in the specialties in which there is a shortage of diseases. The clinic is designed to bring to the children of remote places the services well known to those available to children in the larger urban centers through the out patient clinics of the hospitals.

District Health Unit No. 3 composed of the Counties of Antrim, Charlevoix, Emmet and Otsego, was established on November 15, 1930 and functioned as a full time service of the staff of the Health Department have reached 185 schools. Over 5,000 health inspections have been given to school children by the nurses. Three thousand seven hundred nine physical examinations have been made by the Health Officer. Four hundred sixty-eight visits were made by nurses in the homes of the parents and children. Two hundred forty-six children have been immunized against diphtheria. The dentist in the last two months 1,539 examinations, inserted 494 fillings, extracted 481 teeth and given 445 cleanings. Two hundred forty-six children received this attention.

"Agricultural Happenings"

In order to find out what the exact cost of producing potatoes on a business basis a group of ten farmers are being engaged to keep an accurate account of all time spent, as well as all expenses in connection with potatoes.

It is a well known fact that the cost per bushel varies in different localities and of coarse varies according to the weather and many other conditions. The Soil Crop Project some two years ago the cost varied from 38c to 90c per bushel. It is felt that by having this work carried on this year that it will give us some very accurate information as to what the actual cost is for Charlevoix County. The following farmers are interested in this project: Harry Behling, Boyne City; Howard Stephens, Boyne City; W. K. Straw, Boyne City; Wm. Todd, Boyne City; Edd Jensen, Walloon Lake, Leroy Hardy, Boyne City; Ed. Kowalske, East Jordan; Clinton Blanchard, Charlevoix; W. D. Henley, Charlevoix, and Lester Hardy, Boyne City.

The two recent flower meetings held last week at Charlevoix and East Jordan were well attended and proved to be very valuable to the folks interested in making their surroundings more beautiful. Mr. Paul Krone, Specialist in Horticulture, was the speaker and spent considerable of his time in discussing annuals and perrenials. By means of slides he gave the audience a very clear conception of how the varieties of flowers differ in color, shape, and where they can be grown to the best advantage. Many questions pertaining to lawns and how to eradicate diseases, pests, and weeds, were discussed with the audience.

"Shrubs"

Last Thursday evening at Boyne City an audience of over 90 heard the illustrated lecture given by O. L. Gregg on the subject of Home Beautification. Mr. Gregg proved very clearly that by the use of our native shrubs and trees that homes could be beautified very inexpensively. Here in Charlevoix County we are blessed with an abundance of native shrubs which are ideal to use and can be easily gotten, take for instance Nitebark, Dogwood, and Elderberry. Then in regard to trees have the Cedars, Pines, and Spruces, all of which do so nicely with a landscape project.

It is only a matter of getting at it, to become interested in beautifying your home. Usually a very few hours expenditure of time and effort will make you marvel at the change which takes place.

"Home Management Achievement Day"

The Achievement Day held at Charlevoix last Wednesday as a fitting climax to the Home Management Project was a huge success from all angles. This Achievement Day represented the largest number of organized groups carrying of the work that we have this far had. Over 200 women were enrolled in this project and with one or two exceptions all the groups in the County finished up the series of four lessons.

Mrs. Lydia Anne Lyndy, the main speaker, held her audience spell bound. She was the type of speaker that a person can listen to for hours. Her subject was "The Playing Parent," a subject that certainly touched upon all the problems that parents are very conscious of. A program was held both forenoon and afternoon, and attracted a turn-out of 125 very interested ladies.

This Achievement Day was one of the most interesting and inspiring, if not the most, meetings that we have as yet held. Miss Oona Stautz, Specialist of Michigan State College, who was the instructor at last meeting was present and continued to some length the project "Home Furnishing" which will be started this Fall. The Congregational Church Ladies cordially proved themselves to be wonderful hostesses for this gathering, and surely can be complimented upon the splendid luncheon served at noon.

"The New Creamery"

All dairymen in the county will be deeply interested in the announcement that the New Cooperative Creamery located at East Jordan, will start operations June 1st next. At a meeting last Thursday night at East Jordan, a live representation attended and practically everyone was present to discuss the best way, or ways of gathering in the cream.

Directors elected were: Peter Nielsen, Ellsworth; Emmet Orrege, was established on November 15, 1930 and functioned as a full time service of the staff of the Health Department have reached 185 schools. Over 5,000 health inspections have been given to school children by the nurses. Three thousand seven hundred nine physical examinations have been made by the Health Officer. FORD BRAKES ARE UNUSUALLY EFFECTIVE

Reliability and safety due to simple design and careful construction

ONE of the first things you will notice when you drive the Ford is the quick, effective action of its four-wheel brakes.

They are unusually safe and reliable because they are mechanical, internal expanding, with all braking surfaces fully enclosed. This prevents mud, water, sand, etc., from getting between the band and drum and interfering with brake action.

Other outstanding features of the Ford are the Triplex shatter-proof glass windshield, four Houdaille double-acting hydraulic shock absorbers, aluminum pistons, torque-tube drive, more than twenty ball and roller bearings, Rustless Steel, reliability, economy, and long life.

You save when you buy the Ford and you save every mile you drive.

THIRTY YEARS AGO

A crowd of the friends of Sheriff Billy Pearson swooped down on him at his home Friday evening "unbeknownst" to him. A very pleasant evening was spent, during which Mrs. Pearson spread a bounteous lunch. This was a case in which the captors were captured, and he was held by his captors until they got through with him.

Last Monday evening was a regular meeting of Charlevoix Chapter No. 141, Royal Arch Masons, and it was the occasion of a very pleasant incident. In a previous issue of this paper we spoke of the hard work incident to the birth and early nurturing of the infant chapter, and of a meeting of several Royal Arch Masons who had been present as a sort of Masonic midwife to the trying days when the infant was cutting its teeth, making a battle as it were. The baby is a robust, healthy and intelligent kid now, for this meeting of Monday night was the occasion of the presentation to each of the present proteges of a spoon in token of their appreciation of services rendered in the honorable guild as such. Col. D. Cochran leaves in the Masonic nursery. And so last Monday night, the only other past high priest being present, Lorin Stone, in the evening, high priest lithgow was, by a case, called out, that other calling past high priest, Wm. Lithgow, and the sick kam had sent the babes and breast plate of a high priest many years, and his right hand was left out. Brother Stone then presented each of the babes with one handily clothed from the chest by the embracing high priest and a spoon apiece. The Colonel was made to stand up, and then considerable line of kindly sentiment was by the royal craft, as was presented with an elegant and costly Knight Templar watch charm. The Colonel in response, said he was a Knight, but for the first time in his life he was speechless. Supper was followed in which Commissioner Wattles learned more about his Masonic and stronger affiliations than he ever knew before. It was a very pleasant incident.

The Harbor Springs Graphic has the following pen picture story the march has been said about the pen serpent and it appears to have been a classical one as a page book to most people, and certainly the majority regard the story of a sea serpent in the bay as the one tale of someone who has nothing better to do than manufacture made stories. However there can be no question but that there is such a thing as a sea serpent, based on fact, which appears in the bay occasionally. As we have stated before, it was seen by Mrs. Wm. Williams and J. Haynes, who are reputable men, and are not given to manufacturing stories nor telling what they do not believe to be the truth. They saw it distinctly and were able to give a good description of its appearance and size, which corresponds closely with other descriptions given by others. Mrs. Williams, both keepers at the Point, was watching a fleet of boats sailing in the water when suddenly the "sea serpent" appeared on the scene, and seemed to be coming for the boats. It appeared to her to lie between thirty and forty feet long. She took the strong marine glass that is used at the light house and formed it up on the monster and watched it for about five minutes. She says she could distinctly see it, even to the eyes. Its head was about the size of that of a horse, dark brown or blackish on the back shading into green and finally white on the neck. It would raise the head and neck out of the water about four feet at times, and seemed to be playing. Suddenly it made a dive for the gulls and tried to catch one, but failing in that, swam rapidly out into the bay and disappeared. No one who knows Mrs. Williams will question for a moment her truthfulness and she could scarcely have been deceived when she had the aid of a powerful glass. There are many other reputable people who have seen a similar thing and would at any time make oath to it. Among them are C. B. Mastin of the Bank of Harbor Springs; Fred Oppenlander, Contractor; Charles Aarhart, Supervisor of Readmore, of Little Traverse township, and J. W. Babcock, ex-township clerk. They all give the same description of the appearance of the head and fix the size about the same. It can't be all snake story.

FORTY YEARS AGO

Henry Barth was the successful bidder on furnishing the boiler at Fort Mackinac.

Baxter Post, G. A. R. voted on Monday night to observe Memorial Day in a proper manner and the use of all the old soldiers and their friends to join them in the ceremonies on Thursday, May 30th. G. O. Hudson, Jacob Steed and M. J. Sterkman are the committee on arrangements.

The first dredge that came in Charlevoix eighteen years ago stirred up quite a ripple of excitement, the one that rams Monday was scarcely noticed and made. Dr. Crozier had an interesting time in pulled out the telephone cable.

The Mason and Berdan opening last week made the girls smile, and they are smiling yet. Their display of millinery is glorious. Sombre colors were fairly made to shine and the ladies are in raptures over it. Everything denoted taste, thrift and economy. It was an opening.

President Buttars starts out his administration with energy and pluck spirit. In the work of enforcing the laws and ordinances he should have the support of every citizen.

Never in the history of Charlevoix have there been signs of activity as during the past week. The sounds and swamps south have been a mass of sparkling flames, and on our streets the smoke has been so dense as to be positively painful to the eyes, while the air has been full of ashes and fine cinders. Friday, considerable activity was felt here and President Buttars and Capt. Harry Nichols went out and fought the fire, hauling water on a flat car from the lake and barrels. Farmers say the flames were so savage that green hardwood trees were destroyed. In arranging the Adaptive Masonic Order of the Eastern Star, the founders are looked for five characters who should perfectly exemplify five classes of heroic virtues. The first four were to be entirely with the daughter, widow, wife and sister of Master Mason. The fifth was founded on the well known Catholic legend of Electa, one of the most affecting anywhere. The daughter of Jephthah, because she freely sacrificed her life to save her father's honor; Ruth, because she willingly left home and friends to dwell with the people of God; Esther, because she was prepared to render up her crown and even life itself, to save her people from destruction; Martha, because of her undeviating faith in the merits of her Redeemer; Electa, because she preferred to suffer death rather than deny her religious belief.

H. H. Rose of Petoskey was the guest of Mrs. Rose on Saturday. To the common run of readers the above announcement will let commonplace enough, but the meeting of these two old settlers was suggestive to the editor of a volume of reminiscence, if the old men could be induced to talk. We doubt if there are a number of years in the annals of any community or even in intimate business association that "Hi" and "Ame" did not come together in 1846, when they dug gold together in those exciting days, slept in the same tent, shared their meals in the same log, returned together, and at Northport and Charlevoix for many years were partners in all sorts of business. They never kept a book between them, never had a quarrel, and when they began to settlement was made in an hour without the mark of a pen. When all the property had been divided but one piece of land at Northport, Mr. Rose proposed that they should play a game of "seven up" to see who should take it. Mr. Fox declined the proposition because, as he stated, he really beat Rose in the game and he didn't want the property.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

Dr. Lewis will be ready to raise his three story building this week.

Inspector Maikow caught sixty-three nice trout Friday in Hutton's Creek.

Byron See is excavating the cellar for his new store on the corner of Bridge and Main streets.

The Cheboygan P. M. has a policeman stationed at the postoffice while he is distributing the mail.

The prepetlar Chamberlain arrived here from Chicago on Friday after noon bound for Cheboygan. She, with her consort, the Schr. Tilsbury, will form a weekly line between the two points, stopping here regularly.

Grand Traverse County, with a population of 3,000, has not had a criminal trial for four and a half years.

As an evidence of the increasing growth of Charlevoix refer to the business of S. M. See, the building contractor. He has already eighteen buildings under way and will be compelled to keep his work up to contract.

St. Ignace Republican: In a letter just received by J. A. Waltz from Bishop Vertin of Marquette, we learn that "there persists of a religious order (Capuchins) are to come here about May 15th to take possession of St. Ignatius Mission." The church edifice, grounds and lands of the church will pass into their charge. A monastary, schools and a large place of worship may be expected to arise here on the site of this Mission. After a lapse of centuries the Roman church again sends her priestly orders into this field. In the new order of the march of civilization, how natural that the ancient historic shrine should quicken to life with the stir of speculation and the music of industry. The Catholic people are not to be left like scattered sheep whose shepherd is afar. The Bishop also writes Mr. Waltz that "two Bishop Mrak will visit this place soon after navigation opens to visit the Indians and half breeds. This is a notice to them to look for the good Bishop.

D. Spalsbury, of Elk Rapids, has purchased of Norman Ainslie, the latter's lot and residence adjoining the Sentinel building, for the consideration of $2,000. Mr. Spalsbury will take possession of the property this month and intends to establish a livery stable thereon. Mr. Ainslie will purchase a lot in some other part of the village and erect a residence.

The transformation of the residence of Robert Miller, on Bridge street, in this village, into a hotel, rapidly progresses under the hands of a large force of carpenters. The original building, which will now figure as a wing has been raised about four feet, and the new upright built on the same level. The wing is 24x36, one story and a half high, and the new portion is 24x42, two stories high. Standing as it does on a level with the graded street, room is afforded for a basement the entire size of the structure, and will, as soon as business warrants, be utilized entire. The fence in front is removed and a broad platform extends the entire front reaching to the sidewalk, while from the rear an unobstructed view is afforded of the harbor. The new hostelry will be called the Bridge Street House, and will be open for guests soon after July 4th. Mrs. Miller's reputation as a director of the culinary department is sufficient indication of what the house will be as regards that important requisite—the table, and her ability to make guests comfortable has already become proverbial. The Bridge Street House cannot fail to secure its full share of patronage.

SIXTY YEARS AGO

Snow fell to the depth of one inch on Thursday.

The tug Commodore Nutt blew out her cylinder head on Tuesday, in Pine Lake, and was towed in by the sail boat Hattie May.

The Detroit Post says that neatkin socials have penetrated their way into the northern woods and Charlevoix is indulging in two or three a week.

Richard Williams, Esq., of Cross Village, made a trip from that place to Charlevoix in a small boat recently, in two hours and thirty minutes. The distance is forty miles.

During the terrific windstorm passing last week shook the girls smile, and they are smiling yet. Their display of millinery is glorious. Sombre colors were fairly made to shine and the ladies are in raptures over it. Everything denoted taste, thrift and economy. It was an opening.

Wednesday, a small boat was accidentally upset off the Antrim dock, and four men were thrown into the water. Two of them, who could not swim, were rescued by a boat which proved to be the Union Jack and the occupants John Miller and Geo. W. Garrett of Evangeline, and Thomas Weir, of Bear Creek. Messrs. Weir and Garrett were badly chilled and evidently could not have held out much longer—having been exposed to the elements about two hours, but "Uncle Johnny" manifested a remarkable degree of composure and insisted upon remaining upon and going ashore on his boat. The boat went ashore without damage.

It is for the interest of all persons intending to visit our section to know that the passenger properties Fountain City, Idaho, Bean Richmond, and Oneida, make Charlevoix a regular stopping place. These steamers are among the finest on the lakes and are commanded by competent and worthy men.

The meanest of all vandal visitors, in the opinion of the Florida department of game and fresh water fish, did not take anything away. They left something.

Residents in the vicinity of Jennings, Fla., are still trying to account for the last of 14 coyotes, which were brought from Idaho by visitors several months ago and released, related a bulletin of the American Game Association. Most of the animals have been killed.

Coyotes, hated predatory animal pests of the west, which spread so far north as Alaska, have not invaded Florida, or that part of the country.

A LOW-COST GAS SERVICE FOR ALL

No Matter Where You Live You Can Light, Heat and Cook With Gas

It may seem strange but it is true nevertheless, that while many city folks are complaining about high gas rates, thousands of rural folks are enjoying modern gas service for lighting, heating and cooking at low cost. Stronger still is the fact that these country residents are far from any gas mains.

Here's the answer. Along with the many other improvements for the farm and rural communities has come prompter gas appliances for the home. These new inventions have materially cut the cost of gas to the household. They utilize less gas, save for time, and give an equal measure of convenience to every member of the family.

Primarily gas appliances make and keep cool any gas from coming in contact with food. There are modern stoves that fry, bake or broil with a clean, even heat that is the envy of the cooking. There are gas refrigerators that preserve food in the coolness of pure gas, and there are gas ranges that produce delightful meal and baking from a clean, even flame, under dampers, utility stoves, etc.

Incidentally gas has other home uses that are well dependable. They are complete in themselves, clean and as close to exhaust as possible, and are always ready for use. Gas is the ideal fuel for the modern home.

The cost of gas for any of these services is so low as to be familiar a one as to need here only the merest reference to the subject which is of interest to every rural home. Travel Not Affected by Depression

Washington—Stock markets may collapse, jobs may dwindle, but the eager Americans insist, it appears, still wander among interesting spots corners of the earth.

Going in the same proportions pass port office there are planning to increase their force of clerks. Spring is just around the corner, and soon scores of tourist liners whose sail will be for foreign harbors. Passport visa duties alone more sometimes traveled abroad in 1930, despite the depression, than in 1929.

Little Decrease.

Officials see little diminution so far this year in the demand for Uncle Sam's travel certificates.

Last year 1,070,211 Americans received passports, as compared with 1,035,572 in 1929. In both years our outbound emigration a wider urge to travel than in 1928 when prosperity was moving along under full steam.

And more than ten times as many Americans wander aboard now than in the last post-war year, 1914, according to statistics.

How much do Americans spend when on a foreign jamboree? In 1929, the Commerce Department estimates, they scattered $812,000,000 about the globe, and in 1928, $710,000,000. The 1930 figure is not complete, but officials expect it to rival that of 1929.

"Worst Times."

The depression, however, has had slight effect on travel. The Commerce Department, digging into thousands of pleasure and business trips, found more persons "worst times" than in earlier years, when first-class accommodations were in wide demand.

Nevertheless, Commerce department researchers were surprised to find spending "per capita" remained about just year then the one before.

In the first two months of this year the Bureau of Immigration issued 2,080 fewer passports than in January and February, 1929. But this is explained in part by a recent ruling prolonging the life of passports. Many persons were abroad without applying for new ones.

John Burton, counsel for Schwartz, explained that the answer was filed merely to show that the husband was not entitled to a decree for six months, in any case, it would be worthless.

The time is now either proof before Judge Bartlett.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

There is some form of relievo with the Hoffman which covers the business of employees in the big stadium of New York. When a man dies, the chief is supposed to take care of his dependents, but there was a case the other day which is still awaiting settlement. One of the stadium porters died and the proper authorities made inquiries in Harlem as to who the immediate should be paid. They found that his wife consisted of a husband, who had not seen her for two years through a successful legal separation. But this husband, who, some of whom he ever had been divorced, and seventeen children. The insurance officials are still a little confused as to the proper procedure. The first wife says that she was lawfully for the third wife and family are the real dependents.

Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd was interviewed in a small city of the Middle West. In the hotel where he stopped, there is a desk clerk who has been there for many years and dealt with several generations of traveling men. The owner of the hotel and the chairman of the board of the city's greatest manufacturing concern were waiting to take the admiral out to show him the town, when he decided that he might need a little money. Going to the desk, he asked the clerk if he would be kind enough to cash a small check.

"Well," said the old timer cautiously, "I'll look it. If you can get somebody who has an account with us to endorse it."

I don't know Andrew W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, but he is reported to have a keen sense of humor. Some of the stories they tell concerning him are good, whether they are true or not. They say he once was on a duck hunt in Venezuela, to look over some investment in oil, when there came up one of those fierce and sudden storms for which the Caribbean is famous. The boat pitched and rolled and the other members of the party were considerably disturbed, but Mr. Mellon sat quietly, apparently immersed in thought. Under the circumstances, with the boat seemingly constantly standing on end or down, one of his companions found this an added strain on the nerves.

"What are you thinking about?" he inquired, a bit querulously.

"I'm thinking," said Mr. Mellon, "what a fool I was to buy that cemetery lot."

They tell me that when he was new in office the elder brother of the secretary, Jessee B. Mellon, visited him in Washington. He was struck by the size and handsome appearance of the apartment in which Andrew Mellon lived.

"This certainly is a beautiful place you have," he said. "What is the rent?"

"Oh, about $25,000," answered Mr. Mellon.

"What's your salary?"

"Twelve thousand dollars," replied Mr. Mellon.

"My land!" exclaimed his brother. "Either we are crazy or you are both!"

Practically every resident of Miami knows Miss Oxford, motorcycle policeman, but still quite people drive 100 miles an hour on the boulevard. Yesterday, then gone all over the city making tickets with the greatest of ease. As a result, although Oxford tries to keep his Seattle reputation of the Northwest, he is fast becoming the shame of peaceful, law-abiding town and many of their employers feel this. The only rock with which Hope is not friendly is the one who works for his county. She does not feel him and he regards her with suspicion and disapprobation.

Forty-second street in New York is fast passing into a fashion district. There now are two burlesque houses and a third going out it, and one to the automobile shows are to be found further uptown. New York has an oversupply of theaters. Many of them cannot find good attractions.

One New York night club, which has many of the best names in society, has decided to close. It has sent notices to all its members to this effect, which read: "Last two weeks. Everything at cost, even the cover charge."

Or not, but business is bad.

Machines That Are Almost Human

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Great Brass Brain

IN THE office of the United States most modern and greatest survey in Washington is a thinking machine" that is saving Uncle Sam the work of forty men. Costs the work of forty men. One hundred mathematicians working continuously for a year.

It is called the Great Brass Brain by scientists. Its task is to predict the tides for 4,200 parts of the world, and it predicts them up to five years ahead, to less than an average working day for most.

The Great Brass Brain does this work with absolute accuracy; its mathematical computations are rapidly completed without the possibility of error to which human computers would be subject.

This marvel of scientific achievement stands six feet high. It is three on feet long and two feet wide. Upon this fabulously delicate depends the safety of American shipping throughout the world.

In figuring out tides for a year in advance, thirty seven factors enter into each computation. The tide rises and falls twice times a year at any given point on the earth. The Great Brass Brain not only figures these out, but in its calculations it provides for all variants such as spring tides and neap tides, and tells the exact height to which the water may be expected to rise or fall.

In the early year when the United States coast and geodetic survey grew from a handful of men to the large force it now numbers, the wheels of the Great Brass Brain are set in motion, and before the day is over there is ready for use the printing presses the most exact tide tables as to how the tides will perform during the coming year in 900 principal ports of the world and 3,500 secondary ports.

The report of the Great Brass Brain's work fills a book of 400 pages. Its instructions about tides that they could perform for a month or a year, and even a vessel from becoming stranded on a mud bottom of low water as it enters for port.

The Great Brass Brain can deliver a finished tide table from data in its face monthly into the past. If called upon it can predict with equal accuracy any time in the future. It can tell on any specified date the exact moment concerning those factors of a tide, the height of water at any specified time. It can tell exactly how high the tide will be at New York, New Orleans or San Francisco at 10 a. m. on the fourth day of August of the year. The Standard Armada set out to be launched.

The Great Brass Brain has driven a great deal of the human element out of the Great Brass Brain. Historians of the American Revolution patiently pored over old records to find out when and how the British army long enough to cross the Delaware river. Then they drove this finding ride, on which he was to ride through the night to tell the people to assemble for the American colonists to launch their war for independence.

Scholars after exact facts failed to find any documentary evidence to establish the legend that the wheels of the British army long enough to cross the Delaware river. Then they drove this finding ride, on which he was to ride through the night to tell the people to assemble for the American colonists to launch their war for independence.

MOTHERS ARE LEARNING USES OF MAGNESIA

From the beginning of expectancy until baby is weaned, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia performs the greatest service for many women.

It relieves nausea, heartburn, "morning sickness"; inclination to vomit; helps digestion, ins mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is better than time water for maintaining nurse's milk for infant feeding.

All druggists have Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in generous 25c and 50c bottles. Always insist on the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Vehicle at Home Either on the Rails or Road

The latest thing in railway vehicles is a coach that can run either on rails or on roads. "The Bi-Roller," built at Huntenfield, was recently tested. The railroad coach looks at first sight very much like any other bus; you may see on the highways of today. But a closer inspection shows that it has two sets of wheels, one with large pneumatic tires and the other with flanges to fit the rails. The bus vehicle will carry people the trouble of walking between their homes and the railway station. It is hoped to widely use water may be expected to rise or fall.

Germany to Rocket Moon
Rocket 12 Miles in Air

Berlin.—The first rocket with its fired into space from Berlin's rocket airport at Tempelhofer-feld in April. It is only a step to the moon, they declare their flight, but it is expected to attain a height of several thousand miles. It will be driven by a mixture of gas and gasoline.

The rocket will be fitted with automatic recording apparatus, from which scientists hope to learn much about the atmosphere.

If successful in this three should be many happenings in the world.

Kill Rats Without Poison

A New Exterminator that Won't Kill Livestock, Poultry, Dogs, Cats, or even Baby Chicks

K-R-O can be used almost by the home, barn or poultry yard. Simply mix with ordinary foods as directed and watch the rats and mice disappear. K-R-O is made of Squill, an extract from a lily-like plant. Squill is recognized by Government authorities as one of the most deadly rat poisons known. Government tests show that rats and mice will not touch foods containing Squill. K-R-O is sold with a money back guarantee. Costs only 75c for a large size. Sold by druggists everywhere. WILL TAXES MEAN CONFISCATION

The business interests of the country are going to make a stand before the next Congress for two important objectives: First, to resist any increases either in corporate income taxes or in personal taxes in the higher brackets; second, they are again discussing cancellation of World War debts to the United States as means of reviving international trade, says J. F. Essary in the Baltimore Sun.

As public taxes become inadequate to pay for the ever-increasing public expenses piled up by an army of lawmakers, the few of our legislators try to figure how to hold down or reduce the permanent financial overhead that is being heaped upon the nation, but instead they invent new ways to spend more public money. They increase taxes on existing business that can stand a further push and find new methods of taxation not heretofore devised.

Russia confiscated all wealth. Its experiment worked out in the usual manner—after a topheavy government has eaten up confiscated capital, the individual worker is forced to dig up taxes for the official machine.

Are paternalistic and public ownership ideas simply forerunners of a confiscatory process that should, but surely eliminate the individual rights of the common citizen and eventually confiscates, through taxation, any profit or reward he can hope to get from his personal efforts?

Just how many years this nation can stand public losses of $10,000,000,000 such as last congress heaped upon the people, is a matter of conjecture.

SUPPLYING A NATION

Among American industries, electricity and gas rank third. The seventeen billion dollars invested in providing the nation with these two services is behind only by the investment in agriculture and the railroads.

Supplying the nation's needs with gas and electricity cannot be considered as two separate and distinct industries, for they are twin services. They go hand in hand, supplementing each other in the home, workshop and factory. Combined, they supply the light, heat and power which properly are the products of a single industry.

Together they comprise the most potent force in the advancement of civilization, turning the wheels of industry, removing the loads from the backs of labor, making life easier and its burdens less arduous. As yet the public has only superficial knowledge of the electric and gas industry's operations, its development and policies.

The history of the electric and gas industries has been one of constant progress. Either or both are today available in practically every community in the United States. Approximately 42,000,000 customers are using them, and more than 1,000,000 customers are being added to this tremendous total each year.

In 1900 less than $500,000,000 was invested in electric light and power companies. In 1929, $4,100,000,000 and during the next ten years more than double that of the preceding twenty.

Today electric power and light represents an investment of approximately $11,800,000,000 manufactured gas, $3,000,000,000 and the rapidly developing natural gas business brings the total capital investment in supplying light, heat and power to probably well in excess of $17,200,000,000.

In 1900 manufactured gas was used almost entirely for illuminating purposes but in the next 30 years the gas industry saw greater development than before the advent of electricity. Today 90 per cent of its product is used for heating purposes.

MODERN TOLL ROADS

Not so many years ago the country was hamstrung with toll roads. The motorist, in the course of a day's travel, could pay out a good many dollars for the privilege of using them.

Now toll roads are few and far between. But the motorist still pays a toll, and a far greater one than he paid in the old days. The modern toll is the gasoline tax or privilege, particularly for the privilege of passing over a highway. In states where a three-cent tax is in effect, the average driver must thus pay a toll every time he goes four miles. Under a six-cent tax he pays a cent every two miles. In the latter instance, if he drives 400 miles a day, he must pay two dollars in tolls.

These tolls now aggregate more than $500,000,000 a year, and they are constantly increasing. Rumbles of seven, eight and ten-cent tax rates are heard, and even at present the gas tax almost equals the price of the fuel in many places. The drivers of the old days did a lot of complaining about toll roads, but, compared to the drivers of the present, they didn't know what a toll really could be!

A RUINOUS POLICY

The American people take railroad service for granted. Whenever a person wants to ride across the continent, or has goods to be transported, he knows that a train is waiting to give him fast, dependable and economical service.

Railroad service and facilities are better than ever before.

But during February the lines earned a net profit on their investment of only 1.67 per cent. It is obvious that no industry can continue to progress or give service under such conditions. Railroad business dwindles, while taxes rise and the possible economies to be made in operation become constantly fewer. The industry, in the opinion of many unbiased authorities, is on the verge of a crisis that may adversely affect every business and every citizen.

The problems of the railroads—a basic service industry, a foremost taxpayer, employer and purchaser of supplies—are entitled to thorough and intelligent consideration. A taxation and regulatory policy which was burdensome in good times is proving ruinous now. If our foolhardy attitude toward the railroads persists, the public will inevitably be the chief sufferer.

REFORM AND REFORMERS

It has been observed that the worst thing about reform is the reformers themselves. Recently, Sinclair Lewis, first American to win the Nobel prize for literature, gave a new twist to this by saying, "Reform in general is all right. Individual reformers are all hell." This is especially applicable to those reformers who have turned their attention to the problem of crime. Perhaps the favorite of the crime reformers is the anti-revolver law which is never long lacking from the contemporary scene. It has been tried on New York and other cities and has been a total failure. But that fact, to satisfied reformers, is a detail. So are all facts which might keep them from putting more laws on the statute books to restrict good citizens on the theory that the more lawless elements will thereby be corrected.

BUILDING A PROSPEROUS FUTURE

Today we live in a cooperative age. American industrial supremacy, like American progress and prosperity, has largely resulted from the application of the principle of mass production and distribution to many lines of business.

The troubles of the farmer have to a great degree been caused by a lack of collective effort. Overproduction has resulted from undirected production. Poor farm prices have been partially the result of the fact that farmers are without the power to bargain.

Only by cooperation and organization can a prosperous agricultural future be assured. When ten thousand or a hundred thousand farmers band together and demand a fair deal and profitable prices for their produce, their chances of getting it are infinitely better than if each farmer did business wholly on his own. The present trend toward cooperative marketing is a bright sign on the agricultural horizon.

RENEWED INTEREST IN THE TARIFF

Business, large and small, is showing renewed interest in the tariff.

A shut-out policy toward imports is not the way to bring prosperity back. Diminishing foreign trade has been an important phase of the present depression.

On the other side of the fence, old-style "free traders" are disappearing. Foreign goods must not be outlawed—but some means must be taken to prevent American workmen and American industries from being destroyed by cheap labor competition.

It is high time the whole tariff issue was taken out of politics and given economic treatment for it is intimately related to American and world progress.

FIRE ON THE FARM

During 1930 farmers suffered one of the greatest fire losses in agricultural history—a total of almost $125,000,000, according to the National Fire Waste Council, as compared with an average of $100,000,000 in "normal" years.

This unusually heavy fire loss was attributed largely to the drought, which increased the common farm hazards such as highly combustible buildings, isolation from the protection of adequately equipped fire companies, and general lack of fire quenching facilities.

Even so, the annual farm fire loss cannot be justified. Numerous studies have been completed and others are being made on how to reduce the waste. Many authoritative booklets, dealing with every phase of the agricultural fire problem, are available. The barrier in the way of fire prevention, of course, is the same on farms as in cities—the refusal of the individual to learn the fundamentals of fire prevention, and his carelessness in permitting unnecessary hazards to go uncorrected.

It cannot be questioned that the annual fire waste has done much to prevent farm prosperity. Even if all property were covered by insurance—which it is not—no policy can compensate for destroyed buildings and crops, wasted time, devastated land. Every farmer should take steps to make his property as "fire-proof" as is humanly possible.

M. Stalin is said to have decreed in Soviet Russia that each worker hereafter is to be paid in accordance with the amount of work he does. We don't believe real communists will stand for any such cruel old fashioned doctrine as that.

MOHAIR IS CLOTH OF KINGS, PRINCES

King Solomon's Temple Was Hung With Veils Made from Hair of Goats.

IMAGINE your surprise if you walked into a shop today and asked for a purple dress, hat or tie and were told that it was a color exclusively reserved for the nobility and the "elite," but wanted to purchase a chair and fervor that only numbers in the society Blue Book were entitled to own in the line. That would have been the case years back, when purple was a color for kings only, and only the elite were accorded the privilege of choice.

In the same way, mohair, a material made from the fleece of the angora goat, was once the privilege of royalty and quite unknown to the commoner back in 1931 B. C., King Solomon made use of this luxurious material for his royal robes and ordered the veils of the famous Temple to be hung "with cloth from the hair of the goat." And for centuries to come, mohair was used only by the palaces of the rich and mighty, for draperies, hangings and fine upholstering. Today in 1931, A. D., mohair velvet or velour is to you cherished but within the reach of every private citizen. The business man commutes to his office in a rail car, which whose walls are upholstered in the familiar red or green mohair velvet. At night, he throws himself into an easy chair or davenport finished with the lustrous pile fabric. He takes his family driving in a car lined in the same material and throws a lap-rug of luxurious mohair velvet over their knees, taking his right to the best as a matter of course. Up to date there seems to be no way in which the newspapers can take over broadcasting. It is a new addition in our social and industrial life which will likely be worked out in the future from time.

NOW IS THE TIME

How much can happen in a day! A wire, a telegram, a telephone call, announcing death or other catastrophe can tear us from our path and set us spinning down a new byway.

A sharp word, a frown, or the utterance of an unsupported thought, upsets our fortunes, our hopes, and our ideals.

A moment ago we were in our emotions of happiness and love; now we are sunk to the blackest pits of despair.

When we thus reflect; how important is the present moment if we are to enjoy life to its fullest!

If we have kindly thoughts to express, now is the time to express them.

If we have energy for achievement now is the time to release it if we have worthy emotions controlling others, now is the time to liberate them.

Let us live worthily now. In five minutes the whole face of affairs may be moving us in another direction.—National News.

GIANT BEARS NOW BASK AT RESORTS SAFE FROM RIFLE

The monarchs of North American wild life and largest carnivorous animals in the world are losing some of the illusions of dangerous ferocity built up around them by sportsmen, but gaining a new grip on existence, says a bulletin of the American Game Association in announcing recent measures to save from extinction the giant Alaskan brown bears.

One of the outstanding moves has been the extension of the formerly inland Katmai National Monument to the coastline of Shelikof Strait. It was found that the brown bears—often weighing more than 1200 pounds —like nothing better than to amble with their families down to seashore resorts for the summer, where they have been an easy prey to an increasing number of sportsmen.

Other recent regulations, announced by the U. S. Bureau of Biological Survey, increase from five to seven years the period of close season in which brown and grizzly bears are protected by a hunting season limited to the period from Sept. 1 to June 25.

Lately conservationists have urged protection of the Kodiak bear, famous as an argument in favor of their kind, through creation of a preserve on Kodiak Island, lying directly across Shelikof Strait from the Katmai National Monument reservation.

It is now held that the reputed dangerousness of the bear is overdrawn, and that in the wilds they never attack human beings unless cornered or in a fury of pain.

FISH HUBBY GOOD NURSE BUT BABES SOON GO BYE-BYE

At least one species of fish wife has a "mutt" in which to lay her eggs—thanks to perhaps the most thorough and unsentimental hubby on record.

At around this time of the year the black bass husband sets to work building a nest for his prospective family of from 2,000 to 17,000 youngsters, according to Warden J. M. White of the Alabama department of game and fisheries, as quoted in a bulletin of the American Game Association.

He prepares the nest by fanning away from the spot selected all unwanted material. Larger obstructions he removes with his mouth.

After the eggs are deposited the male stands guard over them, never leaving for a moment and constantly fanning the nest to keep it free of sediment, until the "wy fish appear sometime many days later. During this period he is so ferocious he will attack any kind of intruder.

When his multitudinous offspring are only a few days old, however, they can no longer be protected by parental zeal and enter upon a wayward life which soon makes most of his watchfulness go for naught as far as anglers are concerned. The little fish which grow faster than the rest promptly begin devouring their brothers and sisters, and very few bass reach maturity.

Guarding bass are easily caught, and when taken from the nests the eggs for which they died are invariably destroyed by fish, terrapins and other enemies.

NEWSPAPERS GOING AFTER RADIO ADVERTISING

Newspaper publishers and advertising associations have been holding their national conventions in Washington, and their principal song of complaint has been directed against radio advertising. A number of publishers of large newspapers state that they have been deleting all commercial names from the programs that have been published from day to day. They admit that they would cut out programs altogether but that their readers insist that they shall be published. There is no question but what radio advertising interferes with newspaper advertising, according to all these authorities—and they know what they are talking about.

A few votes have been raised to the point of utterance in which they have declared that broadcasting and radio advertising are here to stay. Up to date there seems to be no way in which the newspapers can take over broadcasting. It is a new addition in our social and industrial life which will likely be worked out in the future from time.

DO FARMERS MAKE THE BEST HUSBANDS

Somebody has started a country-life argument in search of which farmers make the best husbands. Figures quoted by Wheeler McMillen, of the Associated Editor of the Country Home, a national farm publication, show that while 15 out of every 100 city marriages end in the divorce court, only seven out of every 100 farm marriages are dissolved by the judge.

From that display of statistics, the average woman may readily deduce that the surest way to have a perfect annual marriage is to say "yes" to a farmer.

Mr. McMillen admits that "perhaps it does not follow that because twice as many city people get divorced, therefore farmers and their wives are twice as happy together."

He has been asking farm people, both men and women, about it, and they don't all give the same explanation. One farm woman said it in the presence of her spouse that so far as she was concerned the answer was that she didn't care about changing husbands, because the one she had was bad enough.

Another farm woman supposed that the reason farmers get fewer divorces was because they couldn't afford it. One cynical-minded farmer bluntly remarked that "wives are the hardest farm problem to solve."

The facts about the farm and marriage, Mr. McMillen declares as a result of his investigation, are these: that the wife is a partner in her husband's business on the farm than in any other occupation. "The home is the workshop and desk a part of the landscape outside," Mr. McMillen explains. "From the first furrow in spring to the year, the work goes on under the farmwoman's eyes. Naturally her interest in it is more intimate than if her husband's daily toil meant no more to her than the possibility of a new frolic, a new dress, or a new car out of his pay check. She is a partner in the business as well as in the home. There are fewer divorces among farmers, I think, because they are too busy, and also because they are happier in their home than most city folk."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

President Hoover did well, in addressing the World chamber of Commerce to call attention to the great burden of military armaments in Europe. After mentioning the efforts Hoover has given her. She will not disarm for several reasons, among them, mutual national jealousies, fears and ambitions. But the biggest reason of all can be found in the ever-looming shadow of Soviet Russia. The communists have declared war on the capitalist world. And although the Foreign Policy Association has announced that for the first time conscripted troops as 562,000 everyone who is in touch with the situation knows that the potential military strength is far greater. Russia's ability to fight on short lines are organizing the entire nation, man, woman and child on a military basis. Russia can train within a few years they can call out an army of ten million trained men. With this menace hovering over it, it is small wonder that central and western Europe are not inclined to disarm. Yet ironically enough, a great many of our professional pacifists seem sympathetic with Soviet Russia. If they want to start a humiliating movement let them begin by convincing Soviet Russia that now is the time for all good nations to disarm.

Ed. Bedford of the Point Betsy Life Saving crew, was here Tuesday.

Will See and wife have been here for a week, on their way back to their Oregon home from a tour in the east.

Supt. Comfort has completed his work at the lighthouse supply station, Custodian Shields is settled down in the cottage on the grounds and the station may be said to be fully in commission.

Carl Clifford, an employe of the U. S. Treasury Department at Washington for several years, and well known here, has been transferred to the Auditor's Department and sent to Manila, at a salary of $1,800 per annum. Carl was recently married and luck to him and wife.

Away back in the 70's when the Sentinel was an infant, the people in which connected the limited business of Charlevoix was democratic—intensely so. On more than one occasion overtures were made to the publisher to make the Sentinel "independent." For a time the very life of the paper hung by a thread as a result of the publisher's refusal to deviate from the straightforward, stalwart republican course, and this determination is the reason why the Mohawk valley is also made in a republican county by a majority of a couple of hundred. Of course, the sales, sundaies golf courses stuffed sailfish, trimmings and a variety of other joys.

While the chief application of mohair is for furniture, automobile and railway upholstery, it is also used for clothing, draperies, theatre curtains, sundaies golf courses stuffed sailfish, trimmings and a variety of other joys.

The Charlevoix Sentinel has entered upon its thirteenth year. The Sentinel has always labored exceedingly for the interests of Charlevoix and Hon. Smith's exertions have been largely instrumental in securing every favor which has been conferred upon the place.—Emmet County Independent.

The Charlevoix Sentinel has entered upon the thirteenth year of its existance. The Sentinel is one of our most valued exchanges and has done much to advance good work for the development of Charlevoix county and this region generally. At the close of the last week's Antrim County term of court, Judge Mayne and County Clerk Adams are resolutely went into executive session in the clerk's office At on early hour the next morning, without regard to the clerk "might have been seen" traveling in the direction of Cedar river with fishing outfits. The outcome are not known and Boyne Falls state road, and is busy just now in preparation for letting the contracts for its construction.

The distance across the arm here is but about eighty rods and the time of the ferry service between the two towns should be provided between the two towns. The entire region about the arm, as well as adjoining townships are interested in the matter and we hope to see the board of supervisors make a liberal appropriation toward the construction of a bridge. South Arm has already appropriated $500 for that object. It is a necessity that should be provided for at once.

On Thursday afternoon, in company with Judge Kent and Mr. Empey, we walked up to Monroe mill on Jordan River, two miles up from the arm.

Mr. Monroe here has set up ready for action the best sawmill in Charlevoix County. The recent breaking away of a portion of his dam has delayed the sawing somewhat, but work is rapidly progressing, and Mr. Monroe expects to let the water into his turbine in about a month or six weeks. The dam is provided with a long chute and is amply provided for the passage of logs and timber, and serves also as a fish ladder, which the board of supervisors compelled the owner to provide. Provision has been made in the dam for another gate, and during the coming fall and winter Mr. Monroe will erect a grist mill upon the same sawpit and substantial plan that he has constructed his saw mill. Mr. Monroe is full of energy, and will in the coming years do much toward the development of the naturally rich country which surrounds him.

The entire region around the arm and the Jordan is abounding in the natural elements of prosperity and wealth, and we predict for it a future of rapid transformation into one of the best agricultural sections of this region.

Tourist Travel Turns to Small Isle of Man

The Isle of Man, the goal of many an ancient conqueror's fleet, is still open to invasion, but from a much more welcome source. Weather-hatted Manx girls are the air of attraction, as was said no more than the same with silver-haired widows of the Spanish wounds, or the island's friendly climate and fertile fields which Vikings fought for, is hard to say, according to the National Geographic society, which declares that half a million English, Scotch and Irish holiday makers there annually in this amount "to record," its report said, days from August, the isle's highest possible, five one-time kingdoms are visited. The Isle of Man, a diagram itself for many centuries, is centered in the busy little sea within easy reach of Ireland, Scotland, Wales and England. For almost a millennium Manx, or Celtic Gaelic, was the native tongue in the hands of warring nations and feudal lords instead of vacationists. From the Irish conquered the autocratic kingdom, that the Norse descended in their Viking boats, next came the savage Scots raiders, and finally the English. King Terry, the Viking of Durham, was murdered, it was in time of the long Norse dynasty, who established the tynwald court and parliament as part of the government of the law of Man, recognized and retained to be the oldest trade and legislative institution of the kingdom in the Parliament country. So popular are its decisions that even tribunal and training court neglected. It is said.

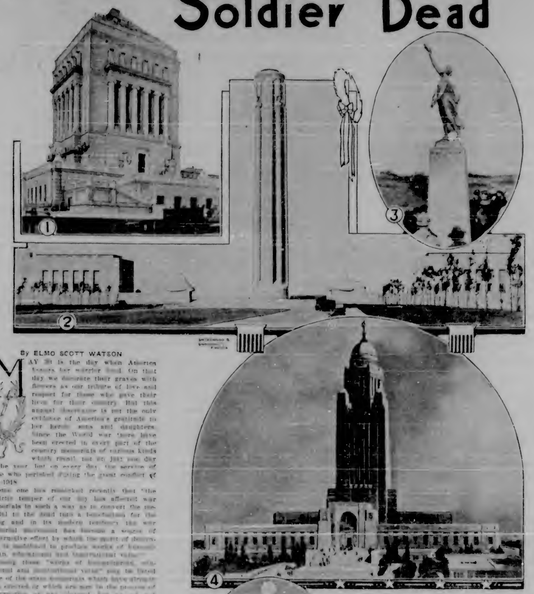
Memorials to Our Soldier Dead



By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MAY 30 is the day when American homes bar warrior dead. On that day we decorate their graves with flowers as our tribute of love and veneration for those who gave their lives for their country. But this annual observance is not the sole evidence of America's gratitude to her heroic sons and daughters. Since the World war taxes have been exacted in every part of the country memorials of various kinds which, except, use or honor the memory of the host but on every day, the sacrifice of those who perished during the great conflict of 1914-1918.

Some one has remarked recently that "the restless temper of our day has affected war memorials in such a way as to convert the memorial to the dead into a benefaction for the living and in its modern tendency the war memorial movement has become a species of conservative effort by which the spirit of destruction is mobilized to produce works of beauty which subordinate their commercial value.

Among those "works of beauty" are included many institutional "aids" and the United States of the states throughout the land, erected, or which are now in the process of construction, or planned, but as yet not brought into being. Outstanding among those projects are the memorial bridge at Toledo, O., the Soldiers' and Sailors' memorial coliseum at Portsmouth, O., the Soldiers' and Sailors' memorial arch at Omaha, Neb., the Nebraska memorial to the Memory of Those Who Fell in the Battle of Flanders field, in the Fairmount cemetery. So popular are the memorial movement has become that even tribunal training court neglected. It is said.

1. The Indiana Memorial World War shrine which is being erected in Indianapolis. It is 270 feet high and has a base of 180 by 270 feet.

2. The War Heroes memorial in Kansas City, Mo.

3. The Missouri State memorial at Chappy, France, the first of its kind on a World war battlefield. The statue of Victory overlooks the route of the town where so many soldiers of the Thirty-first and Eighty-ninth divisions, mainly Missouri men, were killed in charging machine gun nests on these heights.

4. The new Nebraska state capitol which is dedicated to the memory of the Nebraska men who lost their lives in the World war.

5. Model of the Massachusetts War memorial which will be erected on the summit of Mt. Greylock, the highest point in the state, 3,505 feet above sea level. The memorial will be 93 feet high and the ball of light at the top will be 10 feet in diameter.

The Massachusetts memorial (illustrated above) is in the form of a huge lighthouse, in keeping with those structures which are a familiar sight along its "storm and rock-bound coast."

In Missouri the memorials take several forms. Some are monuments, some are arches, some are parks. The memorial law provides that the state appropriate a sum equal to that raised by any county up to $1,000 for the purpose of providing county memorials. Many of the counties have applied the funds allotted to them to the construction of useful buildings or to the advancement of health and welfare projects.

Two Missouri cities have made interesting adaptations of the memorial idea. St. Louis has a Memorial plaza, around which will be grouped the memorial building, a municipal auditorium and the civil courthouse. For more than 20 years a civic center had been contemplated about the city hall, the municipal court building and the public library, but the plan did not materialize until it was linked up with the memorial. At one end of the plaza is the now nearly complete Civil courthouse. Opposite will be an arch. The memorial and memorial building will face each other across the length of the plaza.

The Kansas City memorial is one of the most characteristically American of all of the new monuments. Its dominant note is a tall tower, lifting from a great sweep of terrace, along the north side of which runs a stone wall richly carved with historic figures. The tower, set between two pavilioned buildings, has the appearance of a fitted colonnade. Four rounded piers, which form it, soar aloft in entrances from and on the summit bear an altar of sacrifice.

In Kansas the memorial movement has led to the erection of the Heroes Memorial building, which houses the state highway commission, the state engineer, the state architect and various other state departments. The state auditorium, a memorial to the soldiers of the world war, is also a part of the building. It has a seating capacity of 3,000 persons.

New Jersey has provided for a bronze memorial commission of five members to be appointed by the governor. This commission is required to confer with the United States War Department relative to the feasibility of erecting a memorial in France.

New Mexico is said recently in its efforts to construct a memorial hall and other buildings in the name of its war dead at the 1925 session of the legislature an appropriation was made for the purpose of $400,000, to any of a way commission, a state library of general duties as distinguished from the present state law library.

In New York seven have been taken to create a temporary state commission under a group or site for the erection of a memorial and provides preliminary plans and estimates of the cost. The commission would consist of the governor, the attorney general and the state engineer and surveyor, with three members representing the various branches of the service—one for the army, one for the navy and one for the marine corps. This commission would be required to report to the legislature not later than January 1, 1927.

Oregon has provided for a memorial building commission and has now appropriated $100,000 for erection of the memorial. The commission will see after

School Notes

It seems that a majority of the people agree that the Field Day this year was the best ever given. We, the Juniors, do not boast, as nobody spank what others say. It seemed that all the fairies intervened in our behalf, and furnished a gorgeous night for our especial use. The orchestra was heavenly and although there was no moon, the green lights on the cake served the same purpose. All that was lacking was the cakes.

We find that it was an appropriate dance, for, since we have a surplus fine music class, it was necessary for us to have an equally fine orchestra. Fun for them.

The Juniors appreciate the help given by Hoskins, Mr. and Mrs. Bob Bridge, Foster, Harrington and junk of the 24ths.

Sophomore Study Poetry

The Sophomores have been making a study of poetry lately and as a result we are able to submit a few original poems.

AN ORCHARD

I wandered in an orchard
The trees were all in bloom;
I breathed their fragrant odor
That filled Dame Nature's room.

The blossoms drew the dissolute
As they glistened in the sun.
On a background of snowwhite.
Those blossoms were a-stunt.

Senior Play

Graustark, the play "Behind the Throne" will be given Friday, May 29th in the seniors. The entire seniors class is working hard on the play and part in the production which makes it a real senior play. The acting will be of unusual merit due to the diligent attention to the real technique of dramatic art and the dramatic experience obtained from former plays in which members of the cast have starred.

There are three prominent settings. The first act represents the reception held in Graustark. It is eminent and the lighting effects will be so skillfully developed that the audience will see the lights gradually disappear as the sun sets and these grow brighter as the moon rises. A stone wall, flowers, and garden seats will add to the quality of the scene.

The second act is in the Princess' room. The windows overlook the garden and the light of the fountain plays on the walls. Soaring the Princess up her throne with other members of the court around her will make every one wish to see this unusual play.

Watch for the float at S o'clock.

Civics Election

Hear Ye! Hear Ye! Be it known to all in the High School of the City of Charlevoix that the American (on) election will hold an election next week. All people of the High School of the aforesaid City are requested to partake in the election. Rosier Foster, Esq., has been duly appointed and sworn in as registrar or Clerk of the election and all voters are required by law to register with him prior to the election.

Be it further known that the polls will be open to voters from 8:00 to 8:10 a. m. 12:00 to 1:00 p. m., and 1:00 to 5:00 p. m.

Much work has been done by the Hon. Mr. Robert B. McKay, Esq., during the election. He has appointed the following boards and officers. The judges—Misses Dorothy Hall of Gaelic Kenney, William Clark. Inspectors, Arthur Smith, Glenn Heise, Hilda Vaughn and Agnes Brown, and Charlotte of the Board, Elaine Tillotson. Also the ballot committee, composed of Iola Pennington, Angie Scott and Dorothy Strathern have prepared a ballot that will interest all.

A PINE TREE

I wish I were a pine tree,
Standing on a hill,
With limbs and boughs around me,
As they fly are vale and rill.

I wish I were a pine tree,
Whispering aloud, oh high,
With the stars around me shining,
In the light of the evening sky.

For always through the years
Were in rhyme like a song,
Because it was an easy way,
And didn't take so long.
But now that I've been called upon
To write this little bit,
I find I have an awful time
Getting a word to fit.
Shakespeare, Lowell and Longfellow
Wrote wonderful poems, I'm told
But we poor bewildered Sophomores
Seem mid we're not much good.

Class Prophecy

One sunny morning in 1942, as I was walking down the street in Detroit, I was startled to hear my name called. I looked around and saw across the street my old friend and classmate, Jean Sleicher. She soon came walking over to me. I looked around and saw a stream of cars of the hospitals in the southern part of the city. We all had a good visit and thoroughly enjoyed our breakfast.

In the afternoon I left by train for Chicago. As I arrived there I saw a large crowd of people following an open limousine. Inside were two young women, who a bystander told me were famous musicians. As the car swept by me the two women turned their heads and I beheld two old schoolmates, Gwendolen Miller and Lola Fernandes.

As I was entering the Woolworth store in Chicago I collided violently with a young woman just coming out of the door. Seeing the Princess on her throne with other members of the court around her will make every one wish to see this unusual play.

Watch for the float at S o'clock.

Civics Election

Sophomore Study Poetry

The Sophomores have been making a study of poetry lately and as a result we are able to submit a few original poems.

AN ORCHARD

I wandered in an orchard
The trees were all in bloom;
I breathed their fragrant odor
That filled Dame Nature's room.

The blossoms drew the dissolute
As they glistened in the sun.
On a background of snowwhite.
Those blossoms were a-stunt.

The freighter "Hamilton," made the trip to Charlevoix last week for her annual inspection.

Our Winter Mail Service

More than a month has gone past since our air mail service ended. Still we are not as yet accustomed to the loss of such excellent service received at the hands of the Hammond Air Lines the past winter. This is the first time in the history of the islands winter service that we have had our mails delivered on scheduled time. The contract called for semi-weekly trips. Yet this did not mean anything to the contractors as their sole aim was to transport all the mail even if they were compelled to make four or five trips during the week. At any rate, the mail was always cleaned up at the end of the week. A few days before Christmas they carried ninety-three sacks of mail in three days, the first time in years that our holiday mail reached us before Christmas day.

Last fall when the service was first started there were some who did not approve of the new-fangled contraption as it was open for public inspection, I went aboard. The President for whom it was built was to take possession the following Monday. Once on board I was introduced to the Captain, and my amazement found him to be Bill Novak.

After viewing the steamship I decided to go shopping. I entered a department store and saw walking toward me Mrs. Ida Campbell, returned to their home, Alpena, Tuesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. John H. Keith, who resides at Miami Beach, Florida for the winter months, returned to Charlevoix early this week and are at their cottage "Min-Jon" for the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Mort Orvis, for about ten days guests of Mrs. Orvis mother, Mrs. Charles J. Zeitler, returned to Flint Monday.

Miss Della Crompton sustained a fractured arm and wrist in a recent accident at Bay View and at the present time is in the Petoskey hospital for treatment.

J. A. Noble went to Bay View some few days ago where he is making preparatory arrangements for opening his hotel for the summer months.

Mrs. Will Stevens of Detroit is a recent arrival in Charlevoix and will be located on the grounds of the Belvedere Club for the summer months.

BIRTHDAY PARTY AT ST. JAMES

A delightful dancing party at the Hotel Boulevard was a social function of distinction held on the birthday anniversary, May 11th, of Miss Bernadine McCauley, Mr. and Mrs. Tracy Malloy of Chicago, well known and former Beaver Island residents, were present as guests of special honor at the function.

Mrs. Malloy entertained the guests with several vocal numbers during the evening. Her selections were well chosen, appropriate to the occasion. Her rendition perfect and she has a trained voice great in volume and melodious in the features presented which were highly appreciated by the guests. Mrs. Malloy appears frequently before radio audiences and has received many compliments for excellence of performances.

Late in the evening from lunch, cake and other delicate refreshments were served after which the guests departed with many complimentary and congratulatory expressions and the hope of many more birthday anniversaries for Miss McCauley.

MEMORIAL DAY LEGION PROGRAM

TO FORM ON PARK AVENUE AT NINE-THIRTY A. M.

The Memorial Day program this year will parallel very closely that of 1929, which was carried out so successfully and elicited so much favorable comment.

The parade will form on Park Avenue at 9:30 a. m. and will be joined by the school children, who will be assigned to their places in the trucks on which they are to ride at the school building.

The line of march will be south on Bridge Street to the City Park, where the fraternal, ceremonial, honoring the memories of those who died at sea, is to be performed. From the park, the marchers will proceed south on Bridge Street to West Hurlbut, thence west to East Street and south to Brookside Cemetery, where the services will be held.

The order in which the various divisions of units of the parade will march to be as follows: Drums, music, firing squad, American Legion, other organizations, French Cadets, Sea Scouts, Army and Legion Ship, Legion Post, will be marshal of the day.

At the cemetery, the services will be as follows:

Invocation, Rev. W. H. Randle
Music, City Band.
Selection, High School Chorus.
Ritualistic Work, Baxter Relief Corps.
Selections, Legion Quartet.
Memorial Address, Rev. Fr. Fitzpatrick.
"The Star Spangled Banner," Assembly.
Final Tribute, American Legion Post.
Salute to the Dead, Taps.
Benediction, Rev. John H. Lockyer.

A recital will be given by a group of violin students who are studying under the direction of Mrs. Ruth Steele Tuesday evening, June 9th at the M. E. Church at 8 o'clock.

Warren Kibbe is in charge at the Standard Oil dealer station, taking the place of Harry Smith who has signed recently to engage in business. Very likely for some years past with George Shaden at the Shaden Bowl has retired from further service with Mr. Shaden and taken a position under Mr. Kibbe at the filling station.

Mrs. Etta Hinshaw, a visitor in Detroit for some months past, returned home Friday.

SUMMER 4-H CLUB PROGRAM UNDER WAY

During the last week considerable activity has been manifested by a large number of rural boys and girls in projects to be carried on this summer.

Already the Barnard Calf Club has been organized with a membership of around twelve boys. Cushing Clubs have been started at Ironton and Bay Shore. A Potato Club has also been organized in East Jordan with eight members. We expect great results from this club, of which many members have already completed two successful years. One of its members is putting in five acres this year, and financing it himself.

Then, too, Bean Clubs are being organized at Walloon Lake, East Jordan, and Bingen. Other dairy Calf clubs will be started in Boyne City and Ironton.

It is indeed gratifying to note the interest and enthusiasm shown by such a large number of boys and girls throughout the county. In the majority of cases the girls in the Canning Clubs will aim at least 50 quarts of fruit and vegetables, as well as jellies, jams, preserves, and canned meats. The boys in the dairy clubs are raising not less than one-half acre of beans, corn, and potatoes and will keep all the work possible, themselves.

At this early date it is impossible to submit the names of the various club members, but somewhat later this will be done.

Yours very truly,

PROSPECTS GOOD FOR AMERICAN LEGION DISTRICT CONVENTION

Prospects for one of the "biggest and best" district conventions that the American Legion has staged in this part of the country for several years are enhanced by word recently received from Traverse City that Bowen-Holliday Post is going all out in force and bring its bugle and drum corps, a group of 35 pieces from Cadillac and St. Ignace—the other two invited posts from outside of the district—to attend the big party in June.

Decoration of the Legion home on East Garfield Avenue is rapidly nearing completion and will be a credit to anyone in those who see it after the finishing touches have been added. The formal opening of the club house will be held at the Coulter home on April 15th or the before if Baxter Relief Corps have been expected on curtains for the post hall and the Legion members are to thank the Corps most heartily for its fine co-operation.

Thursday evening, May 28th, another of the Legion's popular, tag card parties will be held, to which members of the community who enjoy a game with the pasteboards are cordially invited. "Spike" Goss is again in charge of the chow detail and that in itself guarantees that the features of the refreshments. Drum practice, which was scheduled for Thursday night, has been postponed until Friday night.

Competent instructors have been secured for both corps of the drum and bugle corps. Claude Fairman of Petoskey, who conducted an act expert with the sticks, is bringing the drummers along in fine shape, while John Tuttle of Wilson's band conducts the bugle section at their first practice under his supervision last Monday night. This musical organization, while not prepared to "strut their stuff" on Memorial Day, should be ready to function by the Fourth of July and, possibly, on the day of the district convention.

Mrs. Gibson and her daughter Florence go to Grand Rapids today to attend graduation exercise to be held at St. Mary's hospital. Mrs. Gibson's daughter is a member of the 1931 class at that institution.

Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Price, after spending the winter in Florida, returned to Charlevoix Friday and are now located at their summer place near Ironton.

A LETTER AS FROM THE DEAD

The following letter written by the late Wm. Ferguson, was recently found in his effects by Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson, who handled the letter to Mr. Adams Monday last.

The Letter
East Jordan, Mich.
Aug. 9, 1930.

Mr. Ira A. Adams, Editor
Charlevoix Sentinel,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir:—

Feeling that I have but a little time to live, and no one left, there are a few things I wish to say in regard to my early residence in Charlevoix for which I hope you will be willing to find space in your valuable paper. I will make them as brief as possible.

I arrived in Charlevoix on the 7th day of April 1879, over fifty-one years ago. When I saw the beautiful lakes and rivers I fell in love with Charlevoix and decided to make it my future home.

On the 20th day of April 1880 I was married to Amelia Russell in the Fountain City House. We were married by Robert A. Miller, a Justice of the Peace. He was also our village blacksmith. There was present in the parlor Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, their daughters, Anna, Ella, Minnie, and Henry Cooper their brother, besides several others, whose names I don't remember.

In the following 38 years I prospered fairly well and did my bit in building up Charlevoix and vicinity. I was born on the first day of November 1858, over 72 years ago. I have no desire to live much longer. I am not afraid to die, but I am afraid to live and I hope that wherever my spirit goes to dwell it will be a nice place to dwell in as "Charlevoix the Beautiful" is, and if so I won't regret my going.

I hope to be buried in my lot in Brookside Cemetery beside my wife Amelia Ferguson, who passed away 16 years ago.

I want to thank you now dear Editor for your kindness and also those who will be put to the trouble of laying me to rest.

I wish to bid an affectionate farewell and goodby to all old friends, and young ones also, and I hope I will meet you all in heaven.

Wm. Ferguson,
Charlevoix, Mich.

Mr. Ferguson passed away April 9, 1931, nearly eight months after the date of the above letter and a write up of his death was carried in the Sentinel of the following week, at which time information as to date of birth and some other data was not obtainable.

SOLONS READY TO ADJOURN

GOVERNOR BRUCKER CAN THEN OPERATE BLUE PENCIL.

Now that the legislature has practically adjourned Governor Brucker can take a deliberate retrospective view of accomplishments performed by the solons as well as of state affairs since his inauguration five months ago.

That Governor Brucker has not been in complete harmony with the legislative body is an open secret. There is nothing out of the ordinary in that respect. In fact it is quite the usual condition to find governors holding viewpoints widely at variance with some of the legislative members.

From the date of his inauguration Governor Brucker was confronted with many complex problems, holdovers from the preceding administration. These were largely a connection with state finances, which, in the main, centered on the several funds in the red millions of dollars. To solve these several problems, raise the money to reestablish the funds on a sound basis has taken time. It has also taken no small amount of effort to create the necessary funds without a heavy increase in state tax for the current year. Other public matters have taken time, patience and study by or through which desired results would obtain.

The mail tax bill created more or less discussion. Members of both houses passed the bill. Governor Brucker promptly vetoed the measure. As a result the bill was passed over the governor's veto and becomes law. The public is more or less divided on the Mail Tax measure. Opinions of individuals are at variance. Some oppose while others favor the action taken by the legislature. Lately we find a preponderance of voters in favor of Governor Brucker's action and are pleased to know that he had the courage to veto the measure and this for in view of the fact that both the upper and lower branches of the legislature could pass it over the veto.

Final adjournment will be taken in a few days after which Governor Brucker may use his blue pencil and reduce some of the appropriations so cheerfully passed by legislative members.

DEMONSTRATIONS CARRIED ON BY FOUR FARMERS

If interest to potato growers in the county will be several demonstrations, two of which will indicate the influence of date of planting on field and quality, and the other two on the benefit of liberal applicatio of commercial fertilizers.

Harry Bolling of Boyne City, and W. E. Straw of Charlevoix are two co-operators in investigating the influence of date of planting. These two demonstrations are made in regular plots to make the results accurate. Three plots of four rows each were planted the middle of May, the next planting will be the latter part of May, and the last date will be around the 10th of June.

In the case of the fertilizer demonstrations Lee Smeltzer and D. E. Ingalls of Charlevoix are the co-operators, and are planning on using high analysis fertilizers in amounts from 800 pounds to 1500 pounds per acre. Mr. Smeltzer will also use different spacing distances, which will enable us to find out the most profitable planting distance to be used.

We have a hunch that the quality of Michigan potatoes can be bettered by planting early by harvesting early (by the first of October), by planting close (from 12 to 18 inches apart in the row) and by using liberal amounts of high analysis fertilizer. When over results are obtainable they will be published as we watch the progress of these experiments.

AS CLEAR AS MUD

Washington has a few wise observers who can tell you far in advance how the elections are coming out. One of them says that President Hoover will be renominated, but: "The way we depends chiefly—almost wholly—on how long this business depression lasts. If prosperity gets under way, he argues, Hoover will ride along on its waves, but if the slump continues—ah, then, he refuses to be responsible for a direct answer. Fine political realism—it reminds us of the fill the about the age of Ann.

Mrs. James M. Harris, Mrs. Irving Levinson and George Cook of Oak Park spent several days last week at Ironton looking after their summer places and making preparatory arrangements in placing them in readiness for occupancy early next month. They returned to Oak Park Sunday.

F. W. Garrett of Grand Rapids was a business visitor here yesterday.

FUNERAL SERVICE FOR JOHN SMITH HELD MONDAY

Funeral services were held at Grandview, Old Church, with Rev. J. E. Lockyer officiating, Monday, for John Smith, a long time resident of this region.

He was a veteran of the Civil war and was mustered out a New York regiment of infantry. His age at expiration of service was given as 21 years. A some question regarding his early life. The Church records had no information in connection with the subject last week.

Captain James H. Gallagher of Boyne City was a business visitor here Tuesday. Captain Gallagher has been engaged in commercial fishing in the waters surrounding Beaver Island, Charlevoix and St. James, and is well acquainted with the work done in connection with the fish industry.

Vincent S. Madison, Columbia University graduate, is spending a few days with Mrs. Madison at the Inn. Mr. Madison is a member of the faculty of the University of Michigan, where he conducts the legal work until about twenty years ago when he moved to the county seat town, where he continued the practice of law and his health failed.

During his long years of residence 48 years in Antrim county he has been prominently identified with public affairs and in this did not confine his efforts to his home town or county. He was interested in Northern Michigan, Detroit and his former home state, Indiana, visiting and personally in the interest of the welfare of the people of the state. He was concerned in them, in their happiness and welfare, and if need be no weather was too severe, no road too far, no trip too much through the wilderness to reach for him to travel in order to render every possible assistance. In the early days every man was his neighbor. In later years his friend.

Funeral service was held from the family home under the auspices of the F. and A. M. fraternity Monday afternoon, Mr. Bailey was seventy-one years old. He was born in Allegan county and is survived by Mrs. Bailey and four sons.

IT'S LITTLE ENOUGH —

We can do for those who left their lives on the nation's battlefields to give us peace, security, and the blessings of freedom. To keep their memory bright, to accord a love and reverence that changes only to deepen, to not inside one silent hour to do them honor—that's all. Little enough, indeed; but once again, on this Memorial Day, we'll do our little—humbly, gratefully, wholeheartedly.

Preserve Historic Telegraph Key

Washington.—A new national heirloom has been added to the White House collection.

It is the gold capped and marble telegraph key which Asa Fitzsimmons have used to open ceremonies. The reels, chunky newspapers, wire and lettings throughout the country.

The key was given to President William H. Taft, June 1, 1909, to open the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition. Monitored on its five-mile journey were 22 nuggets of Alaskan gold taken from the Klondyke August 16, 1896, when the precious metal was first discovered there.

The gold was offered for the test by George W. Carmack, discoverer of the Klondyke fields. Its completion was was four days by moments when the have perished and electrified by the long session in which it has taken part.

The first ceremonial was held in the first room nearly 22 years ago. President over Mr. Taft said all the significances of the ancient and fashionable eagle. The key was mounted on a table, connected with a special wire to Seattle where the exposition was being held. Misinterpreting it was H. W. Rockwell, White House telegrapher.

After Taft had prepared to giving the signal for opening of the exposition Southern indicated the President to be him as custodian of it. He has consented to allow Monarchy to use each age in the White House safe as it is worn a week's trust. Business may be interrupted by brave it there is necessary to a historic object, although now it is an personal property.

In the safety box there is not one small piece which is not gold. That is the safety point for considerations of the material's purpose.

Among the famous occasions upon which the key has been used by Presidents are:

1875—Dwight Gamble drive Panama canal, 10ds—The Centennial exposition, 1927—The Portland Lewis and Clark exposition, 1905—The Jamestown exposition, 1907—The Hudson-Fulton celebration, 1909—The Hampton Roads exposition, 1910—The Brownsville bridge, Washington.

SOFT PLACES

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

Will and Sallie were taking turns-at ann putting in many. Hepsie to take Annie and Sallie were busy laying linen, turning, etc. to take the dangerous way.

"Will, sallie" he stammered finally in explanation of his embarrassment, "you-many kindness, and weakness, we-men are like porcupines — ride as far as you will on the sunny places, but we sure to come upon a soft place at last."

I have had little experience in riding over mountains, but I remember the quills. They looked as even as a floor, as smooth and safe almost as a marsden road, and covered with short grass they spread out as far as the eye could reach. Sixteen miles we rode on to the sunlight and as we looked right to where a single cottonwood stood. But there were soft marshy places ever found. If he set out to ride for there were golden holes and unseen dangerous spots where gravine waters had burrowed into the ground, of which grounded, and also during the winter. One had to be cautious and to remember that the apparently unbroken surface of the prairie had its seventy places where a horse might sink to the saddle and the rider's life be in danger.

But in spite of its spots the mountain is a very beautiful place; its scope of its grider how and its well done the gentle sun its fascinations. It was a wonderful, impressive, country and satisfying.

It is not strange that when we escape the flies and characters of human beings we should find them idealized in the scenery. Perhaps God places mountains, prairies, lakes, streams where but a small and distinct scenery from the strength and weakness of human beings. But they were not perfect—neither human beings.

Distant topographers have seemed to have found what they desired in the soft spots in the form of the green slope which whose their writers, rather than the beauty and the grandeur and the wide expanse of small ground.

Stole Detroit's Tax Receipts

One of the most daring robberies of recent years resulted in the capture of one robber and the escape of another with $5,000 in cash and securities in cheeks which they had taken from a cashier's office in the city hall at Detroit, Mich. The three crooks, captured (right), had took he said an accomplice had cut the wires and taken the money. Apparently from the case during an unguarded moment, although police assigned to guard the city treasurer's office stood less than 10 feet away.

Prowling Owls Lured to Death

Chicago.—When the big horned owls and other feathered predators which prey on valuable game and song birds fly low through the Ozarkian forest preserves Michigan they are out to see several thousand enemies doing a weird, fascinating dance about 25 inches above the ground.

These dancing enemies are not a ghost of the owl's self, but the owl's self, the hunter in the flesh, disguised as an owl.

Each owl is equipped with a set of this dimensions of a Persian garden carpet will be 20 feet 2 inches to 40 feet 11 inches long. Each owl has a talisman that calls such to wolfs. They must be in the air at least 15 feet, as an owl, it will be a great trap to drop snares on. It don't use how a fellow with a cigarette could miss.

"Don't you see?" she sobbed imagingly. "She pose flutting's needed."

Young people of today have plenty of courage. An ore student on the Pacific coast recently left college with his own age. Their studies consisted of a lecture on the various writers, rather than the beauty and the grandeur and the wide expanse of small ground.

The Glacial Period

The glacial period was that extraordinary preceding that of the present, during which great sheets of ice covered much of the earth's surface. The ice sheets was over 2,000 miles long and half as wide, and in places 10,000 feet thick. The glaciers of Europe, for the most part, were confined to the Alps and Scandinavia. The ice sheet which covered North America moved southward from Labrador and Greenland, reaching as far south as Long Island, the Ohio and Missouri rivers mark its southernmost limit. Most of the Great Lakes were excavated by the glaciers.

FASHION IS STRONG FOR PLAIDS FOR SPRING AND SUMMER WEAR

FASHION is going strong for plaids. Interest is that keen in them, designers are exploiting them throughout the style range. Nowhere in the scheme of things are plaids omitted this season. Formally, informally, semiformally, plaids announce their supremacy in the mode.

In choosing plaids one discriminates for the trail of the color finder tends into many plans from summer fairest. They shifting for garden-party frocks and formal evening wear to stately gay plaids for "sportist" pastimes and the simple morning dress. As for plaids in white or the plaid partial to blue, there must the color scheme out in navy or skipper blue and white.

The plaid skirt with a jacket in a solid color is very good style and the new crepe weaves lend themselves admirably to this type of costume.

Fashion Goes Romantic.

If fall skirts, opening dress, little pleated ruchings, side drapings, panels passed very desperately, and coy bustles of a size are not right, then surely hats fashion some romantic. And to prove it whether the pertest forewith of a typical summer girl as

Dugan finished but made no comment. Quantrell was for some minutes silent then he said and had completely turned the tables on him. It was the offender now who jeered at him, who goaded him into the verbal traps that made him furious. Yet he did not want to be relieved, exasperating though the situation was. He found in it the same savage pleasure that one with a toothache has when he is frugal to grind upon the throbbing molar in resentment.

Nor did Quantrell want him relieved. He knew there was very little chance of escape during the shifts of Worrall or Owen. Both of them were oldtimers who had a healthy respect for his prowess. Neither of them ever gave him any opportunity for a snatch at freedom. They watched him like hawks. Quantrell felt that if he was to make a getaway it would have to be while Dugan was in charge of him. At least two months at their ease and the alarms would be sprung. He put his life on that possibility. It was many miles pretty hopeless to escape. But he had to be sure of his moment. If there was any slipup, if he did not succeed, O'Hara would see that he never had another chance. Every moment that he was awake, no matter whether he was eating, resting, or dozing dreamy, his mind was busy with the problem, pursuing the line—was to divert the guard's mind and make him for one instant careless.

Quantrell played the long shot he had planned one morning soon after Worrall went off duty. He had been playing solitaire in a little table, handling the cards awkwardly with his manacled hands. Now he was apparently tired of the game. He leaned forward the more attractive one of the remaining Grant's cabbage.

The guard was sitting opposite him at the table, less than three feet away. Quantrell dropped his arms, and let his head incline forward to rest on them. He was in the attitude of one who is tired to sleep. Dugan looked at him for the moment, then went on with his reading.

Quantrell moved his arms a little, and his head rose a few inches. He looked at the guard through half-closed eyes. Dugan was reading, his head bent over the book. The man's chin was sunk on his chest, his eyes fixed on the printed page.

Quantrell dropped his head, satisfied that Dugan was off his guard. He moved his arms forward, and his head rose

SUCCESS IN HABIT CHANGES

Success or failure in life, to those given to generalizing, has often been due to such frequently quoted factors as hard work or its opposite; faith in an ideal or the lack of the same, or to good or bad habits There are many other factors that could reasonably be advanced, but habits probably play one of the most important parts. During the World War the crushing defeats of the Russian Armies by Von Hindenburg's hosts were attributed to some military experts as much to the difference between Teutonic and Muscovite habits as the superiority of German generalship and arms. General Pershing in his recent memoirs inferred that Yankee adaptability accounted in part for the astonishing success of the American forces in the critical battles at Chateau Thierry, Belleau Woods, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne.

In every day life, George Bernard Shaw, noted British playwright and author, has illustrated the force of this reasoning. "I noticed in my youth," said the famous iconoclast, "that my father ate undercooked, unsavory, unwholesome quantities of meat; that he smoked all day, drank alcohol and took no form of exercise. I saw that most men have the same habits as my father and that most efforts to complete change of habits might produce success. I thought, anyway it seemed worth trying."

From that day, Shaw ate no meat. He forswore not only alcohol but also tea and coffee which he regards as only slightly less harmful. He constructed a revolving cabin in which he could follow the beneficient rays of the sun through all the daylight hours. He also saw to it that he had sufficient healthful exercise.

Shaw is regarded by many as an extremist, but his record of accomplishment and his high degree of physical well-being at the age of seventy are convincing arguments of the soundness of his philosophy.

FRANCE: MOST PROSPEROUS NATION

Measured by almost every index, France has stood forth in the past few years as the most prosperous nation in the world. Doctor Julius Klein, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, who has recently made a personal survey of the prospects for American trade overseas, writes in Collier's Weekly: "The material progress of France is one of the outstanding features of the post-war decade. Until recently her employment has been practically nil, whereas the jobless armies in America, England, Germany and Italy are counted by millions. Her per capita bank holdings are $67, as against $42 for Switzerland, $39 for Argentina, $34 for the United States."

In iron and steel exports France has stood at the head of the exporting nations. In telegraph wire mileage France is best equipped. Her roads, in proportion to population, are the most adequate on the globe; her improved road mileage per thousand of population is 9.9, whereas that of the United States is 5.1, England 3.9 and Germany 3.

France's well being is conspicuously impressive. What is the meaning of all this in terms of American interest?" Doctor Klein asks and answers: "Well, for one thing, Franco-American commercial relationship stands out almost uniquely for the remarkable steadiness of its relative importance to each of the participants. In spite of war and post-war upheavals, trade between the two great republics in terms of its relative importance has been singularly undisturbed.

"Our participation in the buying power of this new France, which has arisen with such impressive strength since the war, is well illustrated by the increase in our machinery sales, which are three times what they were before the war."

BRIDES AND BUSINESS

The statisticians and business prophets are watching the June Bride with a new respect this year. Ever since a recent survey indicated that she was responsible for about a third of the nation's annual purchases of home furnishings she has assumed a new significance as a business barometer.

The survey, conducted by the Bigelow-Sanford Carpet Company, the largest manufacturers of carpets and rugs in the world, showed that although the 1,250,000 couples married each year represented but four per cent of the total families in the United States, they account for 32 per cent of the annual rug and carpet business. Total purchases of these commodities by the newly weds in 1929 were found to be $93,750,000.

The 3,900,000 families that change residences each year were found to be the largest rug buyers as a group although per couple their purchases do not equal the brides'. Representing 14 per cent of all the families in the country, the movers account for $120,000,000 or 40 per cent of all the rug and carpet business. The remaining 22,850,000 families, comprising 82 per cent of the total, purchase but 28 per cent of our rugs and carpets or about $83,500,000 a year. The Bigelow-Sanford economists suggest that this proportion applies generally to sales of all home furnishings.

Controlling as she does such an important share of those annual purchases, the June Bride this year finds herself an important figure in the world of business and economics.

ANOTHER OIL PROBLEM

The so-called Pennsylvania oil field, situated in Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and West Virginia, constitutes the cradle of the world's oil industry. For more than seventy years this field has been a consistent producer, and a world-wide demand for its superior lubricating oils has been built up. And today, with the most modern methods of oil recovery and refining in operation, this veteran field is threatened with loss of its markets through competitive tactics of the big oil companies.

In a complaint filed with the Federal Trade Commission, the Pennsylvania Grade Crude Oil Association alleges that the big oil companies are corralling the independent service stations through exclusive dealing agreements which close the stations to the products of most of the Association's members. Not only do these tactics deprive the Pennsylvania producers and refiners of their outlets, the Association contends, but the public also, is unable to obtain the brands of oil they desire. With thousands of formerly independent stations being tied with agreements to deal exclusively in the products of the big oil companies, the Pennsylvania oil men say that this old industry is being threatened with extinction.

The Pennsylvania Association contends that the so-called "lease and agency" agreements used by the leading oil companies in obtaining exclusive retail outlets is in restraint of trade. The Federal Trade Commission is being asked to issue a complaint against a Group of the largest oil companies. It is a case which will be watched with keen interest because of its possible far-reaching effect upon many types of business that are being subjected to increasing pressure from powerful competitors.

NEW WORDS IN RADIO "SLANGUAGE"

Page Mr. Webster! Even that learned gentleman, who gave us a dictionary, would be stumped in his some of the expressions used by musicians in the modern dance orchestras—words that, while meaningless to the layman, are heard every day, especially in the mysterious and highly interesting broadcasting studios. As new radio words come into general use it is probable that word-mongers like A. R. Rolfe—who has a complete vocabulary that he has either invented or acquired for use in rehearsing the Lucky Strike Dance Orchestra,—will find some of his newest wrinkles in "slanguage" in revised editions of American dictionaries. A few sample words and expressions are listed below, with definitions.

Sock Rhythm—an accentuated beat, employing the kettle drums in a tom-tom effect.

Wah-Wah Chorus—descriptive of the crying effect obtained by the trumpets in such pieces as "Bye, Bye, Blues."

Jumbles—describing unusual chords, quarter notes, or trick rhythms

Low Bumpitys, a typical Rolfism—low, full tones.

The Woodpiles—a combination of two xylophones and two marimbas.

Schmoos, another Rolfism—so-called "low-down" music, smooth and full.

Impats—the Julius, in marches, etc.

Get Brutal—a hard, accented musical attack.

Smear Is—a sustained, flowing melody.

Hit it and Kill it—a more too gentle request for the cymbal player to lay on the muscle and kill off the after vibrations.

Pinpoint—thin, sharp trumpet tones.

Sting It—hit the opening note sharp and clear.

Noodles—the arpeggios which form a back ground for the melody. Usually played by the xylophone.

"MISS JENN'S" PAGEANT

One of those interesting women who combine the charms of social and cultural background with the energy of the modern woman of affairs is Miss Jenn W. Coltrane, the genius behind a mammoth King Cotton Pageant to be given at Concord, North Carolina, May 28 and 29. Miss Coltrane is known among her friends and "kin" in the South as "Miss Jenn." This is the name, too, by which the workers in her father's great mill affectionately address her.

"Miss Jenn" visioned earlier in the spring a dramatic presentation of the ancient and extraordinary history of cotton. She talked to a few people; went to New York and saw a few more. Then, she sketched a pageant, conferred with artists and theatrical producers. "The Voice of Cotton Pageant" was a reality. The pageant will be given in an open air theatre at Webb Field in Concord. Southern beauties will present in dramatic pageantry the history and progress of King Cotton from the Orient to a grand finale depicting the marriage of the "King" to Queen Dixiana Cotton, the bride being the daughter of Ancient Cotton and Modern Science which has produced a perfected cotton mercerizing process now generally adopted by the industry.

Since cotton was originally brought to the United States from Siam, King Prajadhipok and his dainty, winsome Queen, have been invited as special guests at the Voice of Cotton presentation.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litchert

During the past few weeks there has been an acceleration in the propaganda campaign to induce Uncle Sam to cancel the European debts. It is not fair to call these "war debts" for the reason that a great deal of the indebtedness, especially in the case of France, was contracted after the signing of the armistice. It may be that this quickening of the debt cancellation propaganda was to pave the way for the International Chamber of Commerce meeting in Washington, which it was anticipated would make a forceful arraign for debt cancellation. If this was its purpose it failed miserably. So far as creating or forthcoming sentiment for debt cancellation the International Chamber of Commerce meeting was a complete dud.

Presidents Hoover himself took a great deal of the argument away here and has been conducting a campaign address when he called attention to the astronomical sums which European nations were spending on armament and advised them to "reduce." It was a little embarrassing for European delegates to talk about reducing the debts when it had been pointed out in advance that they were piling up much greater burdens on their people in military preparations for the "next war".

As a matter of fact the "burden" of debt payments to America on the backs of European taxpayers is very small when compared with the burden of war taxes borne by the people of Minnesota, pointed out recently that foreign governments pay their debts to the United States "with less than one half of one per cent of their annual wealth, less than three per cent of their national budget, and less than 15 per cent of what they spend for their armaments for war." And the senator added that he had serious doubts as to the validity of the argument that we ought to cancel debts in the interest of international "good will" for the reason that "if a man is only your friend on condition that you pay his bills, his friendship is of doubtful value."

It is doubtful if debt cancellation propaganda is making any great headway in the United States. It is not only the statesmen and politicians who are against it. The great majority of our far-seeing business men take the same attitude. Among these is Silas Strawn, prominent lawyer and business man of Chicago, who stated recently on his return from Europe: "Many of our European friends would like to have our government cancel, or at least collate or postpone, the international debts, and reduce our tariff. I endeavored to point out to them while from their standpoint that might be a consumation devoutly to be wished, I did not think that the taxpayers of the United States would be very enthusiastic about assuming $11,000,000,000 in war debts, and releasing all other nations from their obligations, and at the same time taking off our tariff and letting our debtors compete with us on unequal terms while we were laying the taxes to liquidate our debts."

Propaganda for lower tariff and debt cancellation usually goes together because it is spread by those who have the interests of Europe rather than of America at heart. Mr. Strawn in his remarks quoted above put the American case from the economic standpoint. "I'm a outsider!", so to speak. It would not be good business for Uncle Sam to cancel the debts, nor would it be good ethics. It is to be remembered that cancelling the debts would not enable them to vault into this air. Someone would have to pay them and the someone in this case would be the American taxpayer. On the other hand, there is no assurance that, even if we did agree to wash the load on to our own taxpayers, that the European taxpayer would be relieved of any burden. The chances are that the money saved would go into increased military expenditure. The case at this time is clearly against the debt cancellation at in America.

BUSINESS PITFALLS IN FARM DISTRICTS

Bankers Point Out Hazards of Unsound Practices and Help Farmers to Avoid Them.

WAYS in which bankers may commend sound farm practices are described by Lawrence F. Hill, of the Kansas State Agricultural College, in the Journal of the Bankers Association of Kansas. He says:

"In farms in connection with the organization of dairy cattle, a large adjustment of very inferior animals would have a chance to be sold at auction to local farmers. A banker recently advised and informed the bankers that the local farmers lacks confidence in the community. The bankers refused to finance the purchase of the cattle and in a few months time it showed that they were entirely in another county. The same action is also taken in the first instance and the second county assigned.

"Another is a primary precaution in can trying to capitalize the Kansas farmers' desire to improve his quality or industry, communities or farmers to purchase inventory plants before production and local conditions justified them. Informed of this by the State Agricultural College, the bankers association sent warnings to every bank in the state, leaflet sent to farmers who buy cattle for feeding purposes. A farmer feeds two or three cars of cattle one year and makes a good profit. This induces him to buy twice or three times as many the second year, still more the third and so on until he finally loses more by buying too many cattle on feed in a year of bad prices than he made in several previous years with smaller numbers and better prices. When bankers discourage bad practices their action is a positive benefit to the farmers concerned."

When drop rakers spread out too much in baking the trouble is sometimes that the oven is not hot enough, rather than that the mixture is too soft. Drop cakes bake best on a baking sheet without high sides, or on an inverted pan.

Lansing. — A state park site at Wolverine in Cheboygan County, adopted by the Conservation Commission in 1925, has been abandoned.

The land, acquired through gift to the state, will be returned to the donors.

The park site was abandoned on recommendation of the Parks Division of the Conservation Department on the grounds it is within six miles of the Burt Lake State Park which is established and developed. No development work has been done at the Wolverine site.

A battle between a conservation officer and four fish-netters on the shores of Pickerel Lake, Branch County, resulted in a justice court conviction that meant a $180 fine and the confiscation of some valuable fishing equipment.

C. E. Cole, Branch County, conservation officer was on his regular patrol when he saw four men netting black bass. When he stepped the four men after they reached shore, a fight started. Three of the men broke away. However, Cole succeeded in holding Stanley Smoker. Stanley Smoker was convicted and was forced to pay a fine of $100 and costs totaling $180. A net, boat, oars, a spear and 42 fish were seized.

This spring Willard Ferguson trapped at the South Fork of the Muskegon River, in Otsego County, that had been banded by Jack Miner of Kingsville, Canada; and a few days later Jack Miner caught another fish that had been tagged by Ferguson.

The two fish were "swaps" between the sportsmen of Minnesota, pointed out recently that foreign governments pay their debts to the United States "with less than one half of one per cent of their annual wealth, less than three per cent of their national budget, and less than 15 per cent of what they spend for their armaments for war." And the senator added that he had serious doubts as to the validity of the argument that we ought to cancel debts in the interest of international "good will" for the reason that "if a man is only your friend on condition that you pay his bills, his friendship is of doubtful value."

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Mr. Walbrecht, of Central Lake, and Mr. Densmore and several Royal Arch Masons, visited Charlevoix Monday evening.

Andrew B. Dougherty, Deputy Collector of Internal Revenue, was here Sunday. Mr. Dougherty will on the first of July go to Washington and qualify as a special agent of the U. S. Land Office. He will be stationed at Seattle.

The Westinghouse automatic engine for the electric light plant is here and has been placed. The new Dynamo is expected soon.

The Canadian steamer Indie, with the Canadian exchange Orgone, at the end of a 1,000 foot tow-line both coming here to fond's country after Pine Lake cargoes, made the lower ship of Charlevoix a bit of trouble Wednesday morning. Being too large to shorten his line and too illegy to employ a tug, the captain towed the barge into the temporary bridge structure completely wrecking that portion north of the pontoon swing. As we write all traffic on the north side is suspended and highway commissioner is sending a tug after John Monroe's steam pile driver at Kalkaska. Jordan. The vessel will be holden for damages.

Newsed Notes.

The new Methodist organ came Saturday and is a decided improvement on the old one.

Emma Stafford and Wm. Pasmore here were married last Wednesday and are stopping at Charlevoix for a time.

It is rumored that the G. R. & I. will not extend their road to Mackinac this season.

The Chicago resort monstrosities were in Charlevoix and went forth leaving other their grounds. They will soon commence the construction of their hotel and several cottages.

The oldest inhabitant who of a party of American people now visited Chicago last week by Propeller Empress Cain City. Charlevoix folks have a weakness for that popular steamer, and upon this occasion the enjoyment of the trip was heightened by most favorable weather. The steamer was nearly two days in Chicago giving her passengers time to wander about among the sights and scenes of the city of the west and those were made both ways at Milwaukee. Capt. Colson makes his steamer a favorite and those who travel on her, and those who take passage on her once are sure to do it a second time.

The Wildman and Peck theatrical company closed their week's engagement in this village on Saturday night and left Sunday by steamer Lucelle for Petoskey to fill a similar engagement. The company have met with a favorable reception here considering the insufficient facilities furnished them in the way of a hall. No company can do itself justice upon such a stage or indeed such an auditorium as Wildman's was compelled to be. The plays were all of a high character—"Ten Nights in a Bar Room," "Our Boarding House," "Rip Van Winkle," are well known to theatre-goers. Mr. Wildman as "Rip," "Col. M. T. Elevator", "Sample Switched", "The Yankee in Cuba," etc., shows him to be a star. Mrs. Wildman as "Lady Isabel," "Fanchon," characters of great difficulty, and played by the most eminent actresses in the largest theatres, is well entitled to the applause which greets her.

The finest collection of strawberries we have seen or tasted this year were recently by Hugh Miller, Esq., of Charlevoix township. The mess of green peas from the same source was appreciated.

John Wagner of South Arm township, timed a bear one day last week whereupon he took his axe around the bear, made an incision and gave him gun, and returned and put a quietus to bruin's existence.

On Saturday evening last a meeting was held at the Postoffice to take into consideration the celebration of the Fourth. It resulted in committees being appointed to secure and collect funds and ones for an address, a dinner, etc. Let everything be done with a will and the celebration will be made a success.

Fourth of July

As we go to press we are informed that the tug and two scows which have lately been chartered by Mr. Pike will leave Round Lake at 9 o'clock on the Fourth, returning in the afternoon. There will be reading of the Declaration of Independence, an oration and poem composed for the occasion, fond music will accompany the party.

Serve Mankind in Innumerable Ways

WAY back in Old Testament times, when a day of atonement was at hand, the altar of the people were symbolically placed on the head of a goat which was then allowed to escape into the wilderness; hence the word scapegoat, or blame-bearer which has come down through the ages.

No longer made to endure this illegal is, however, still serving mankind in a variety of other ways, especially the excess or moiety of wool in it is called from its fleece. All the fibers are doing this they are also growing a wonderful amount of long, silky, white mohair which is harvested once or twice a year and sent to the mills for manufacturing into fabrics.

The pile material resulting, known as velvet or mohair velvet, is in great demand as upholstering for parlor chairs, trains, sussex and airplanes as well as for fine furniture in the home because it will wear practically forever, and is as easy to keep clean as it is beautiful in look at. It is one of the most satisfactory floors known for dyeing. Mohair unlike wool, cannot be felted, but is permanently repellent of moths and therefore cool and comfortable as a suit fabric.

It has been noticed that moths will actually die in preference to attacking the fabric. When one considers the tremendous amount of damage done annually by this innocent looking little insect, it is obvious that for this feature alone mohair deserves a place in the sun.

The demand for furniture covered with fabric leads from the fleece of the shorn goats has increased steadily until now the United States leads the world in angora goat raising and consequently in the production of mohair materials.

Its great durability is undoubtedly the chief reason why mohair velvet is so extensively used. No other is the beauty and luster of its soft texture would suffice to win the home wife's repeated approval if mohair velvet, or velour as it is often called, did not surpass all other materials in wearing qualities. This is partly because the fabric itself is the longest wearing mohair fiber known and partly because it is a pile fabric, with the wear coming on the surface of the fiber instead of among the fibers as in a woven fabric. Mohair velvets are formed in the square inch of mohair velvet.

Some knowledge of the physical structure of mohair is necessary to understand why it makes a superior upholstering fabric. Some mohair is coarse and harsh, while other is soft and silky, with many grades in between. Mohair on the wool fiber. This scale has a rough, serrated dirt is easily removed with a soft brushing or wet sponge and water if necessary, without affecting the luster.

Then, too, mohair makes a fine, solid dye that reflects a soft sheen and strong light must not be fanned.

The mohair industry is interesting economically as the particulars listed below show. The industry has per fected a means of effectively using every part, fierce, all-consuming love; of a man and a woman swept into a maelstrom of emotions which neither of their desires and neither can resist. Love is wrung from their hearts, accepted or denied, and the compelling dramatic direction of this production sweeps all who see it along with the master theme.

Filmed on a majestic scale, against the colorful background of old-world Marseilles and the intriguing French Foreign Legion, "Morocco" is epic in proportions, a contribution to cinema art which will rill its director, Josef von Sternberg, even higher in the ranks of the truly great motion picture makers. "Morocco" is more than human drama told in pictures. Back of its amazing emotional action is a fascinating setting, an astounding realism, a fusing of the forces of nature and of life that lift a picture to greatness.

Gary Cooper, private in the daredevil Foreign Legion, whose business is fighting, whose pleasure is flirting, is attracted to Marlene Dietrich, beautiful cabaret singer, and strikes up an acquaintance with her. She, too, like Cooper, is a disillusioned being, believing in no man, scorning all love. Nevertheless, these two are powerfully drawn together in spite of themselves, and in spite of the efforts of Adolphe Menjou, wealthy, socially prominent, who also loves the girl, and offers her love, wealth and social position. Cooper, seeing that the girl would have to give up for him, attempts to destroy her love for him; she, unwilling to hamper his free career, tries to fight his infatuation. Neither are successful. Inevitably they come together.

This surging romance is pictured against the sensuous and colorful life of North Africa, in Morocco, a city of weird masonry, twisted, uneven streets, of veiled women and swaggering Legionnaires. Here is the Foreign Legion, bronzed men, picturesquely uniformed, marching to the blare of gay trumpets, the quick beat of drums. These are scenes to quicken the pulse, to fan that spark of adventure which everyone possesses.

REGULAR PAINS

The modern Miss needs no "time out" for the time of month.

If you've ever taken Bayer Aspirin for a headache, you know how soon the pain subsides. It is just as effective in the relief of those pains peculiar to women!

Don't dedicate certain days of every month to suffering. It's old-fashioned. It's unnecessary. Aspirin has always shielded you in safety and in comfort. Take enough to assure you complete comfort. If it is genuine aspirin it cannot possibly hurt you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. It does nothing but stop the pain, as safely as it does.

Remember, if you get inconvenient headaches outside, that a little Bayer Aspirin will always ease the distress. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking a few of these remarkable tablets. So are the little nagging aches that bring fatigue and "nerves" by day or a sleepless night.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets rest so very little after all, that it doesn't pay to experiment with imitations!

VERY American home is a general sort of way than each apple in the Union has an investment of higher learning, imparted largely at the support for state appropriations, but how many of us know anything very serious about them, except those who are trying to get what they are actually entitled to? If they are contributing some of the extraordinary American ability to the development of our wealth and prosperity and are being productive of the maximum of service to the state and its citizens?

Within these pages, at least, we need not fear that we are talking to the deniers of the states for the support of which public appropriations for many are cut off the public funds? To us many of these institutions are fine, as parents where winnings football teams are involved, where, judging from newspaper reports and press notices, the state's universities and colleges and rarely before what time the freshmen are not asking to about where parchment notices and "coach loves things."

The purpose of this article is to suggest to those who do not read beyond newspaper headlines very little of what is going on in these citizens' schools and scholars activities, and to point out some of the activities which seem to be commonwealth interests to the majority of those who contribute to its support. Then farmers in Michigan, for example, in recent communities who spoke of a basic university in the state, voted by 2 to 1 that they were in favor of the establishment of academy and community built to suit the people of the state" whereas there have been vocal discussions, the value of which probably approximates a hundred million dollars a year, to certain sections, over the question of the appropriations for all purposes combined, research and institutes.

Recently there came from New York the news that the legislature of that state was considering for an appropriation of $50,000 to establish at Dr. Stephen Monroe Babcock as an agricultural memorial. Dr. Babcock was a scientist who carried on the investigations at Cornell university, in the New York Agricultural Experiment station and at the University of Wisconsin, which resulted in the now-famous Babcock milk test. Before he invented this test there was no satisfactory means of determining the percentage of butterfat in milk and the importance of his invention lies in the fact that it furnishes one of the simplest dairy products by indicating which animals should be weeded out and which saved for breeding. It is unquestionably to estimate the cash value of this test to the dairy industry of the United States since it was performed in 1890, but it probably runs into millions and millions of dollars.

And the Babcock milk test is only one of the many discoveries and inventions made in the laboratories of our state universities. To list them all and evaluate them adequately would be impossible within the limits of this article, but some idea of the scope of the state universities as a vast laboratory of science and citizenship as to the purpose of your taxes, as well as to the wider service they be obtained by considering the contributions of one of them—the University of Illinois. To some folks, of course, this institution at the "twin cities" of Urbana-Champaign, Ill., has little merit, since has other more unfavorable end to others it has not made the slightest contribution which seems of immediate personal interest. But without having any invidious comparisons, the work of this institution and some taken in hand at other state universities are considerable to the enrichment of our national life.

Researches carried on at the University of Illinois, as at other such institutions, cover virtually the whole field of human activity and touch the lives of almost every American. Among the contributions of this particular institution which have attracted world-wide attention are three outstanding ones: The discovery of Illinois, the only chemical element ever discovered in America; the production of Illinois a new metal which can be strengthened for platinum in many instances, the very definite contribution to the literature for history; the low temperature process for making coal which restores to coal-beds worth more than the original cost of the fuel and the development of the hemes for converting greenhouse poisoning.

The value of the researches have been expedite evidence in the major fields of industry and agriculture. Illinois, like most of the states, needs have been inaugurated in building portions of relief labor in national operations and investigations on housing, food of many necessary wants. In agriculture researches of great have contributed and are contributing to the needs, and have affected every phase of agriculture in the interests of better living, and better business and profits.

In both industry and agriculture the investigations and the resulting contributions have been made in so many diverse ways that even a brief enumeration of them would be impossible for beyond the limits of this article. In agriculture, for example, the use of concrete and reinforced concrete in farm construction. The revised building codes now about to be adopted in Chicago, New York, Philadelphia and other cities, governing the safety and proper design of structures worth many millions of dollars, depend in large measure upon the work of the engineering experiment staff in this field.

The department of mining engineering of the university, through tests conducted last summer, believed that a possible saving of $2,000,000 annually in the operation of 40,000 of the larger type of locomotives in American and Canadian railroads could be realized through the use of the Horsley siphon, an appliance for the locomotive fireboxes. The investigations proved conclusively that a gain of 5% per cent in locomotive efficiency is possible.

The mine rescuers' record station in America until extensively host coal thank the University of Illinois for the efficient places and practical ideas and for the resulting comfort and economy.

The intensive system of feeding combinations and other buildings is at on in the lot of Illinois, as in the case of Ohio and in the performance of such services, which could be used as a national basis for the design of improvement load loss daily factors and the university's energy, their studies.

The costly process of distilling water for locomotives can be eliminated, university engineers have proved, and as a result an annual saving of several millions of dollars is possible in America alone. Through the use of compress on a process which involves the possibility of utilizing the lower freezing temperatures in the extraction of ice. It is estimated for the industrialists that if this problem is satisfactorily solved it will mean an increase of 50 per cent with no added increase in cost of production—except cost of a large individual annual profit is involved.

Equally important have been the lessons investigations in the field of fatigue of metals, water, metals for greater safety in highways and bridges, and the need in engineering in civil engineering which makes buildings, bridges and highways safer, in the solution of problems of ventilation in which the health and comfort of the public is involved and in the improvements of the drying industry.

But perhaps has the value of a state university to the commonwealth been more evident than in the contribution which the University of Illinois has made to the agriculture of the predominantly farming Prairie state.

There was a time when little of no Illinois was used in Illinois farmers, but taxes on the university was controversial. Bonds authorized the first time to or commercial on many acres which would not afford to grow crops of value or other purposes, in the experiments, the progress from 40 bushels to 80 to 90 bushels of corn have increased to 60 to 100 a bushel and more accepted as a rule for. More than the farmers' crops of wheat, have been increased to almost three bushels to the acre. The time required to mature beef cattle for the egg markets. Many of these improvements in agriculture in a laboratory of farm practice, where the colleges and the students and staff may learn. Some of these experiments in agriculture, time to farmers become in many cases worth to them to plant business, before they are in fact in their farms, before they are in the farm practice.

Like many of these programs in Illinois has been increased to almost 25,000,000 a year as a result of revolutionary corn cultivation, of experiments directed by the university agriculture.

Benefits of more than a million dollars annually are made by Illinois farmers as a result of the college's breeding the cause for the growth of hybrid corn in the state. At 1931, time it was found that the utilization of soybean meal as a protein supplement for hogs, the commercially possible with the crop. Since the introduction of soybeans as a crop in Illinois, the acreage has increased from 1,000 acres to 1,250,000 acres. Larger acres of annual livestock feed has been developed, and the possibility increased field of soybeans for their growth and consumption. A considerable new economic industry has grown, million dollars annually in Illinois farmers as a result of the research work of the university. Soybeans are used for livestock feed, for human consumption, and in many other ways, a large part of which would have to be imported. Soybeans are also used in the manufacture of paints, varnishes, linoleum, printing inks, soaps, and many other products.

Information showing that of the seventy-seven million bushels of corn produced annually in Illinois could be saved for added profits of seven million bushels worked out in corn disease studies.

Anticipating the economic need for fuel-power, the Illinois experiment station has been working on the problem of producing fuel for gasoline engines from farm products. Alcohol from corn, sorghum and sugar beets has been found to be a satisfactory fuel for gasoline engines, and the university has developed a process for producing alcohol from sorghum juice.

Service First Wednesday of month only 7:45 p. m.

Reading Room Tuesday and Saturday 3:00 to 5:00 p. m.

The public is cordially invited to attend our services and use our reading room.

"Soul and Body" was the subject of the Lesson - Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, May 24.

Among the citations which comprised the lesson-sermon was the following from the Bible: "O God, thou art my God; early will I seek thee: my soul thirsteth for thee, my flesh longeth for thee in a dry and thirsty land, where no water is" (Ps. 63:1).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Become conscious for a single moment that Life and intelligence are purely spiritual, — neither a nor of matter, — and the body will then utter no complaints. Health will flow in a bolder of calmness, you will find yourself suddenly well" (p. 14.)

Science to Determine Human Character

Atlanta, Ga.—Intelligence tests are based upon fundamental theories but in the examination of human minds, science speculates finally will be able to ascertain the source and point of departure of all human beings, Dr. L. G. Hardman of Georgia believes.

So convinced is he that a study of physiognomy, performance of finger prints, will result in the definite determination of character and personality, he has just recommended legislation and the establishment of a special chair at the state university to study the subject.

Five revered courts he has outlined on correspondence and hand reports dealing with the theory, but to date none has written anything of truth. Hitherto, Hardman says, only persons for their viewpoints.

Now the governor believes the time has been reached to inquire. "I have had the finger prints of my parents at the white house printed, and to all those who ask me for my fingerprints, I give them."

"I don't know what's the matter with Georgia," he said. "She's a good worker and he is willing to work, but so far he has not gotten hold of any thing that amounts to much. He seems to want to know how to sell himself."

And yet Georgia was familiar with the town and with the conditions of living. He knew where the cheap rents were and he did not seem to have an idea of time to waste. I got into a taxi cab and the man for whom he is working says he never has had a

Resourcefulness

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois

Resourcefulness is a name often used to describe the ability of a person to meet emergencies and to solve problems. Some persons appear to be more resourceful than others. Some are more ingenious in the devising of means to ends. Some are more inventive in the making of contrivances. Some are more skillful in the use of tools. Some are more adept in the management of men. Some are more clever in the handling of things. And one person may be resourceful in one way and another in another way.

Now I am quite different with whom I have to do with problems of human relations. I am not resourceful. I am not ingenious. I am not inventive. I am not skillful. I am not adept. I am not clever. I am not resourceful. I am not resourceful in the handling of people. I am not resourceful in the management of men. I am not resourceful in the solving of problems of human relations. I am not resourceful in the use of human beings as instruments for the achievement of my own purposes. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to do what I want them to do when I want them to do it. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to like me. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to work with me instead of against me. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to work for me instead of against me. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to work for me instead of against me. I am not resourceful in the art of getting people to work for

EXPENDITURES THAT BRING RETURNS

Three main causes are advancing the secondary road movement—the need for relieving congestion on main highways, the efforts being made in all states to reduce taxes and keep down governmental expense, and—but perhaps greatest importance—the necessity of giving farmers year-round contacts with markets and the outside world.

Good secondary roads are a perennial attraction to farmers who welcome the opportunity to see the "back country" that main highways often avoid. They favor locations in small towns and rural and semi-rural areas that would otherwise go principally to the larger retail trade. They know from past that the average cost of a good, year-round secondary road, made waterproof, dustless and mudless by use of asphaltic or road oils and suitable for a fair amount of traffic, is not $2 a rod, more or less—about one-eighth the cost of standard hard paving. Upkeep expense is likewise low and such roads can be adapted to make their territories in using local materials as the base.

From the standpoint of the farmer, good roads are indispensable. They mean an end to the time when they have had to wait for mud to thaw, in the spring, before they could get mired. They remove the obstacles in the way of receiving medical attention and the lighting facilities, or sending for children to get to and from school. They are the means to connect the states have ever made in behalf of agriculture and the small town.

It is no wonder the good roads movement is making great progress even in a time when "money is tight." The public is learning that tax money invested in good roads is one of the few forms of public expenditures for which the people get more in return than they pay out.

ARE THE PEOPLE INTERESTED

Revolutionary changes have taken place within the railroad industry in the last decade, based on a comparison between the first two months of 1921 and 1931.

During that period in 1921 the lines earned $876,000,000, and in 1931, $702,500,000—A decline of 20 per cent. Passenger earnings went down almost fifty per cent.

Taxes in 1921 totaled $418,800,000, as compared with $343,200,000 in the same two months of 1931—an increase of 21 per cent.

It will be wondered how the railroads were able to stay in business in the face of such a record, and at the same time improve their service to the public. The answer is simple—through an intensive program of economy and cost-cutting. Operating expenses were 32 per cent less in January and February of 1931 than in 1921. But it is believed that the saturation point in economy has about been reached—thus, if profits continue to go down, there will be one inevitable result—retrogression in standards of service.

There is one more set of railroad statistics that should interest the public. In January, 1921 the railroads had 1,805,000 employes, and in January, 1931, they had 1,334,000—471,000 less. It is estimated that the total unemployed in the nation number about 5,000,000. Consequently, profitless conditions within a single great industry have already been responsible for almost ten per cent of unemployment.

Are the people interested in state and national policies which encourage investments and employment?

SAFETY RESTS WITH THE INDIVIDUAL

During 1930, insurance companies paid out $300,000,000 as a result of automobile accidents —only a little less than was paid out for fire loss. The automobile death toll of 32,000 was about 7,000 more than were killed in industrial accidents.

In both waste of life and cost to the public—casualty insurance rates are a direct reflection of accident statistics—carelessly and incompetently handled automobiles constitute one of our foremost problems.

At one time it was believed that the ends of safety could be advanced by improved roads, cars and the like. But experience has given this theory a sad blow. It is not uncommon for some new and important improvement—such as four-wheel brakes, better tires, or lower center of gravity in a car—to result in more accidents, due to the public overrating the new safety factor. For the same reason, removing hazards from a stretch of highway will sometimes result in more accidents occurring there as a result of more careless driving.

Now safety authorities recognize that the most important factors are not roads and automobiles, but the driver and the pedestrian. They must absorb the "safety idea" if any definite progress in automobile accident prevention is to be made. The difficulties in spreading this idea are obvious—at present about 40,000,000 people drive the 27,000,000 cars in this country.

So the problem comes down to this—a sense of responsibility on the part of the individual motorist and pedestrian. Users of the streets and highways have it in their power to make those streets and highways safe—no one else can do it for them.

TIMES ARE CHANGING

"At the bottom of the present distress of the oil industry is a fundamental conflict between economic and statute law," says Western Business. "Statute law holds it to be against public policy for producers to agree among themselves to limit production. Economic law makes it imperative that they should so agree. If they do not, oil is overproduced and wasted today.

"In this conflict the oil industry is not seeking to put itself above the law and defy the government. It has for years been trying to discover a middle ground between unlimited competition (with its attendant overproduction) and unified control (which could force production down to the level of demand). But no attempted compromise has achieved anything like effective success.

"This is not simply a question involving oil, vital as it is to the whole petroleum industry. It involves the whole relationship of government to business. Business must enforce laws in the present; it cuts the cloth of its action to the pattern of actual conditions. Government must free itself from the dead hand of outworn social and political concepts; it must not expect to apply the rules of 1890 to the facts of 1931. The times are changing with unprecedented swiftness."

THE STRANGEST ARGUMENT

It is interesting to reflect that the strongest argument against the adoption of unqualified limitation of the sale of firearms to the state and federal government, is the crime situation itself.

In many of the great cities in which crime flourishes and is a leading "industry," anti-gun laws are already in effect. Some of them are extremely strict. But only the law-abiding citizen feels the weight of the restriction. It seems not to have the slightest effect on the criminal class. Nor is there any reason for believing that there is any reason for exempting the criminal class from the operation of such laws.

What is needed is correction for the unlawful use of firearms and not restriction of the vast majority of citizens who use guns only for a safeguard or for sport. This would leave the good citizen with his constitutional right to protection for himself and his family.

Those people who are always soap-boxing in favor of unqualified anti-gun laws, might do well to think this over if their real object is the reduction of crime and safety for society.

FOR THE FARMER TO CONSIDER

It is estimated that at present there are some 30,000,000 pounds of quality dairy butter in storage. Prices are the lowest in 26 years. This may seem a tremendous surplus but, as the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association of New York points out, it could be entirely eliminated if each of the six million American farm families would use one extra pound of butter per week for a period of five weeks.

It is brought out, further, that the dairy farmer himself is not without blame. A survey of cross-roads and village grocery stores disclosed that a large part of butter substitutes sold in this country are purchased and consumed by farm families, in spite of the fact that these substitutes are lacking in the protective vitamin found in genuine quality dairy products.

It looks as if the solution to the dairy phase of the farm problem is largely a matter for the farmer himself to solve through his own dinner table.

SHOULD DEMAND TAX REDUCTION

Nothing but a permanent increase of government expenditures and permanent increase of taxes can result unless there is a limit placed upon bureaucracies which the government is building up, emphatically declared Senator Borah of Idaho, in a statement issued April 29.

It needs no argument, he said, to satisfy one that government expenditures are wastefully large and that the ever-growing burden of taxation is one of the great factors in bringing about our present depression. But there is no remedy for these things unless the people, the voters themselves, place this subject on their agenda and call for an accounting in no uncertain terms.

WORDS OF WISDOM

The Saturday Evening Post, in a recent well-worded, calm and deliberate editorial, points out a real danger from communist activities in the United States today. It shows that there is no reason for hysteria but that there is definite reason for curbing this menace within our own boundaries.

It believes in neither a fool's paradise type of indulgence on the one hand, nor violent suppression and reaction on the other.

In concluding its comment, it says: "It takes effort, even for a nation as great as this, to remain sound and whole."

For a nation which has no army and navy China seems to be getting its fair share of the world's fighting.

They are now talking about a life term for Von Hindenburg—but they mean in the German presidential chair.

Advice to young men: Put your money in good bonds rather than on bad blondes.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

The propagandists are at it again. Announcement is made of another nation-wide campaign to create sentiment for getting Uncle Sam in the League Court. The announcement comes from New York in the shape of a statement from Philip C. Nash, director of the League of Nations Association. One of the purposes of the campaign, according to newspaper stories, will be to secure petitions which are to be sent to Washington in an effort to flood the Court with the idea that the internationalists do not want the issue to go into the next campaign. For in spite of their efforts to propagandize the Senate into believing the people are demanding the League Court, they know full well that if the issue should get into the campaign the internationalists will get as decisive a beating as they have on previous occasions.

One significant newspaper statement results Mr. Nash with declaring that as soon as the delegates get in the World Court another drive will be started to get him in the League of Nations. This should be interesting information for those Americans who seem to believe that we can get by in the League Court without involving ourselves in the League. The fact is that international politics are bound in their devotion to their doctrine and will stop at nothing, if given free rein, to involve America in the United States thoroughly in European and world troubles.

In the meantime it is interesting to note an editorial in a recent issue of the London Chronicle, an influential English newspaper which sets out the same doctrine. Although some of the address was spoken of by all who heard it as a made-for effort Last Thursday it has been growing steadily in Great Britain during the past few years, as the English begin to see that their security is no longer in the hands of the British Navy. Nor is it any longer necessary to call attention to European jealousies and more to their own well being. The Chronicle editorial says in part: "The truth concerning the League of Nations has been hidden from the people of this country (England) for years by a conspiracy of bluffs and hypocrisy working upon the susceptibilities of decent trusting people."

Summing up the situation in Europe today the London paper continues:

"Geneva says nothing and does nothing because it is the creation and branch of the French foreign office.

"It is 12 years since the end of the war and 10 since the foundation of the League of Nations. What is Europe's condition at the end of that period?

"1. Italy, bellicose, suspicious, and aggressive, is increasing and strengthening her army and navy.

"2. Germany is aggressive of French domination and is determined to become the master of Central Europe again.

"3. Jugoslavia, backed by France, is increasing her army in barely-disguised hostility toward Italy.

"4. Poland, supported by France, is maintaining a swollen, powerful army, menacing Germany and her own neighbors.

"5. The Balkan states are restive in mutual hostility, in the grip of France and Italy.

"6. Austria-Hungary, dismembered by the treaty of Versailles, is hostile to her neighbors and stifled by France and her allies.

Commenting on England's duty, this British editorial says:

"The Daily Express affirms and reaffirms that the League has become an instrument of war, with Geneva the meeting place of international intrigue.

"Britain must turn from Europe. Her colonies and commonwealth of dominions offer a heritage of opportunity such as no nation has possessed in history."

The American people do not want to become entangled in the European mess and the Senate should refuse this and doubtless will. Our law-making bodies will have enough to do looking after affairs at home for the next year or two, without involving the country in European politics.

NAVAL MAINTENANCE BEING NEGLECTED

As America is a land which produces excellent business men in large numbers, there is no use in shouting the fact that to enable executive constructs a large plant and then fails to keep it up, foremen or Filipinos will help build that plant and then run it until it fails apart, but we Americans, with our business schools and scientific management, could not do such a thing.

So keenly do we appreciate the importance of maintenance in most undertakings that it is instructive if not pleasant, to realize that in one very vital and very prominent enterprise we have since the war refused to provide the necessary maintenance funds. That enterprise, which gives the United States more direct advertising abroad than any other, happens to be the United States navy. Its value as a guarantor of peace is unseriously disputed. If really brought to their notice Americans will agree that the navy should be properly maintained. But public attention concentrates on so many other things that a view of the navy from the maintenance standpoint would shock any sound business man.

Ships, like textile machines, wear out at intervals which can be fairly well predicted. The government, therefore, must not only provide for the building up of the navy to the treaty ratio so that parity may be achieved; it must also furnish funds for the replacement of ships which are outlasting their period of utility. The question of replacement—or maintenance—is of course, well understood by American business and by foreign governments, which between 1922 and 1930 built more than twice as much as did the United States in the same period. But it is a question which is not understood by Washington, which does not know that whereas the maintenance of the United States Navy by replacements requires an average annual outlay of $104,000,000, the government has made appropriations equivalent to less than $24,000,000 a year. The fleet has thus been allowed to slip backward to the whimsical rate of about $80,000,000 a year.

It is a great pity that with the gradual disarmament of competitors we moved there should be this laxity in Washington. An adequate building program is the best insurance against business in the widest possible sense but would also do nothing to arouse suspicion or resentment abroad. In the meantime the navy falls behind to a point where it will soon be inadequate even for training purposes. A quantity of essential construction is being piled up which will have to be built in a hurry when the need arises —to the great discomfiture of curtailers and of the rank of industry. Neglect of maintenance is just as serious for the navy as it is for a railroad. It is even more serious for the country.—New York Herald Tribune.

AMERICAN SENTIMENT ON WORLD COURT

William R. Castle, Assistant Secretary of State, said at Indianapolis that he would be willing to discuss the World Court question "when the Senate comes to its senses." An Indiana newspaper, commenting on this statement declares, in effect, that opposition to the World Court comes from only a few demagogic senators and that they are in the minority with public opinion, but that public sentiment in this country overwhelmingly favors the acceptance of the Root formula and immediate American entry into the International Court of Justice of the League of Nations.

Determining what public opinion is on the World Court is important in entry into the League Court through acceptance of the Root formula is largely a matter of press-work, but whatever evidence exists is contrary to the theory that the people of the United States are demanding American involvement in the judicial department of the League of Nations. It is a significant fact that the national conventions of neither of the great political parties took action in favor of League Court entry in the last national campaign, although there were platforms with declarations of their candidates. If the country was in a formant in favor of such action, surely political parties and leaders would not have overlooked so good a chance to garner votes.

It will be recalled that in ratifying the protocol providing for American entry into the League Court, the Senate passed certain reservations, designed to safeguard the country against the possibility of entering the court without guarantee that questions of domestic concern, such as the tariff, immigration, the Monroe Doctrine and the like should not become subject of League Court decision. The other nations represented in the League Court refused to accept these safeguarding reservations, especially the one providing that no question affecting the United States should be submitted for an advisory opinion without the consent of this country. The Root protocol substitutes for this provision that if such a question be submitted, we shall have the right to withdraw from the court. In such a situation we would be bombarded by our large and noisy contingent which would sacrifice any American right or interest in behalf of what they call "internationalism", and then should we withdraw, we would be abused by the world over for refusing to accept the jurisdiction of the court in the matter.

The World Court is in no true sense a court. It is not a federal court, because in such a body each litigant would be entitled to equal representation. It is not a court of law, because there is no settled code of international law to guide it. The court is created by and is an organ of the League of Nations, of which we are not a member because American public opinion opposes such membership.

The advice of Washington is still good, that the United States remain free from European political entanglements. The proposal that we submit the whole range of international problems to the adjudication of a body in which we have one of eight members, when many of the questions rising would represent an arraignment of European against American interests, is a perilous one. Europe has not like our tariff laws, our immigration laws, our prohibition laws, or the Monroe Doctrine. But if we achieved it; it must also furnish funds for the replacement of ships which are outlasting their period of utility. The question of replacement—or maintenance—is of course, well understood by American business and by foreign governments, which between 1922 and 1930 built more than twice as much as did the United States in the same period. Neglect of maintenance is just as serious for the navy as it is for a railroad. It is even more serious for the country.—New York Herald Tribune.

"From Vancouver to the northern border of Mexico at Nogales, the highway is already a modern and complete thoroughfare. The first expedition through Mexico, launched and financed by the Automobile Club of Southern California, determined the feasibility of highway construction between Nogales and Mexico City, and the Mexican government is working vigorously to connect these two points with a traveilable motoring roadway.

"The second expedition of the club driving three light automobile trucks, one of them made over to accommodate a radio outfit, started from Los Angeles on January 11th, driving to El Paso, Texas, and from there taking the railway to Mexico City.

"The distance from Mexico City to Panama is the Canal Zone, the southern objective of the expedition, has been calculated, approximately, at 2,416 miles. While this would be a matter of something like a ten-day trip over good automobile roads, the expedition hoped to reach Panama in about two months.

"For a matter of some 450 miles below the little town of Totolapa, a fairly good automobile road extended. Beyond this, for a distance of sixty-six miles, there was a no-man's land of dense jungle, trackless wilderness, and apparently impassable and impossible mountain summits, through which, and over whose barring steeps and precipices no wheel had ever passed.

"To gain some idea of the difficulties of this portion of the trip, the fact that on one day only three-tenths of a mile were made by the trucks may be recorded. In the dense canebrakes and matted corner of the jungles, progress was only accomplished by cutting through the solid wall of growth with knife or machete by the members of the corps of laborers who accompanied the expedition.

"Not even one of the ordinary obstacles of the regions above this stretch of sixty-six miles had ever attempted to stop progress. In the day-time their journey was observed cautiously from the tangled growth surrounding them by the natives, who would come stealthily to where the motor and clamor of the party first attracted its presence. Sometimes, also, these dwellers of the wilds would come in force, with the words of old Polonius to his son ever before you:

"And above all
To thine own self be true
And it shall follow as the night the day
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

Memorial Day was fittingly observed in Charlevoix, although rain prevented the athletic events which had been scheduled. Elbert Slied and the excellent program arranged for the school yard on Friday afternoon in honor of Col. D. C. Watkins. Col. Watkins did himself and Charlevoix great honor on a previous occasion on the same platform. His address on that occasion was spoken of by all who heard it as a made-for effort. Last Thursday it was a powerful, patriotic address was the talk of a packed house. It drew big applause from the moment the first word fell from his lips to the end. Col. Watkins is a veteran of the Spanish war, who saw them in the carnage of battle, the heart to beat task to living heroes of '61 to '65 who were with them in the bloodiest battle that history records. It was the neutral appeal of one who loves his country and glories in its greatness. It was an address in all respects that honored the occasion—a sermon on patriotism that penetrated the soul and quickened the blood.

The Traverse City Record of a recent date publishes an article more than a half column in length giving a very interesting review of the auto business of Keeney & Son in that city. The article states in all seriousness that contracts were made with 13 farmers of Grand Traverse County involving an area of 2565 acres devoted to grain, hay and pasture and, brother, that south would be a run by the Ferry Charlevoix plant before breakfast an hopeless. The Ferry Co. last year harvested 5,000 acres of peas—mostly in Charlevoix county—with a yield of 70,441 bushels for which they paid $70,000. This year they have contracted for 6,000 acres and will distribute 17,000 bushels of seed peas to the farmers and will pay for the yield approximately $80,000. The Keeney Grand Traverse County operations would be simply a diversion to Mr. E. W. Coulter, who directs the affairs of D. M. Ferry and Co. in Charlevoix.

To our amazement it has been taken seriously and literally by the country contemporaries of the Sentinel, who resent it as a slur on the other villages of the country. The understandings of these editors must be uncommonly dense.

The executive committee of the K. P. hall requests the Sentinel to state that the idea which is held by some that on the coming evening, is a "full dress" affair is entirely erroneous. They say it is simply and strictly a plain every-day party where the pleasure to be derived will be from the friendly greetings of the many other features incident to select party, and a generous spread.

Commencement

Tonight at the M. E. Church will occur the exercises attending the graduating of the class of '91 of the Charlevoix High School.

There will be flowers and white gowns and diplomas: there will be gratified teachers and proud parents; there will be the school band in all its dignity and there will be many school patrons who pay the bills. It is a goodly class, this class of '91, all girls but one, and he is a boy—lively but proud boy. The class of '91 has the cordial congratulations of the Sentinel. It is composed of a bright double quarterette of young people who emerge from the humdrum of school life well equipped for life's battles—ready to do their part and the town. The class is as follows:

Adeline S. Holley
Ora R. Couple
Maybelle L. Francis
Jeanette P. Campbell.
Mary E. Lewis
Lula M. Dodge
Wm. C. Ballinger
Mary E. Cook

Go out into the world, young people, with the words of old Polonius to his son ever before you:

To thine own self be true

In it you will get a vivid word picture of the great rush of land seekers of April 22, 1889, when Oklahoma was opened to settlement; of the pioneer days in this giant of the southwest; of the romance and adventure incident to the building of a new state. It is a great story, an American classic, into which is woven the history of an interesting American period, people with the picturesque characters of that time and section.

It will appear serially in THE CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL

USE MUCH MOHAIR IN RAILROAD CARS

Rates as One Fabric to Withstand Wear and Tear of Continuous Service.

PERHAPS you have sometimes wondered why all railroad cars are upholstered in the same material, the familiar mohair velvet that is now almost universally a bright red or green and always of one or two standard patterns. Today even train interiors have become color-conscious and soft greens and warm and quiet shades are now in use still of the same mohair velvet or twelve million yards to the trains of the country.

The reason for this is that no other fabric has been found that will stand all the hard wear and tear of continuous service. Made from the finest of the angora goat, mohair has a fiber so fine that one ounce of it can be drawn out and surrounded a distance of eighteen miles. Yet it is so strong that it is used on automobiles where and many more years would be used for the interiors of airplanes.

In addition to this, velour is attractive and luxurious in appearance, for carpets and even for rugs and is especially fitted with the homelike because it is chemically moth-proofed in manufacture. It is also used for draperies and closely coverings because of its sound absorbing. Its deep pile fabric of soft, which is an important consideration in talking picture theatres, like everything else modern velour has "gone modern" and can be had in an endless variety of tones and patterns and weaves. Over five hundred shades of green alone are now made in mohair velour, ranging from the most delicate shades of green almost to the blue-green and green-blue tones.

But its outstanding feature is its resistance to the ordinary wear and tear of fibrous residue. The finest lustrous gold comes out on a rich, deep pile mohair velour, like rolls and steamer rugs. Similar studies and some colors for home slippers and even wrap and traveling rugs are made from this same fabric which more closely resembles human hair than any other known fibre.

Each fibre is much stronger than wool and has a unique physical structure unlike a fuzzless fibre. Because of its shape it does not mat or tangle under dust and dirt and to the surface acts as a brush and makes the traveler's clothing actually cleaner at the end of the trip than it was before!

No great was the demand keen for this fleece that within a comparatively few years the industry of angora goat raising has been transferred from Turkey and South Africa to the United States, which now leads the world both in the production and manufacture of mohair fleece.

MOTHS WILL DIE RATHER THAN EAT TREATED MOHAIR

AT LAST science is making headway against the moth, that harmless looking, little insect that causes the household drives to spend the time of housecleaning extremely. In regard to at least one important kind of mohair velvet, victory has been achieved.

All fabrics made from animal fiber which is largely protein, are normally subject to moths. Exceptions to this rule of moth destroyers against some are sometimes helpful, but the thorough and scientific way to thwart the enemy is for the material to be permanently mothproofed with chemicals that are now on file with the City Clerk for sum city and open to public inspection.

All bids must be in two parts, one for the land and one part for moths. A certified check for the sum of $200.00 must accompany each bid. Charlevoix must accompany each complete bill.

The City of Charlevoix reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Dated May 25th. A. D., 1931.

Ray S. Hamilton, City Clerk.

WHEN YOU CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry on in comfort.

Harper Aspirin was meant for just such hours, because it assures your comfort. Freedom from pains that ring at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block a threatening headache while it's still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you have caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Harper Aspirin when you travel. Have some at home. It will often "save the day."

From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains, Harper Aspirin is ready with its quick relief—and it leaves no harmful after-effects. Any nagging sensation goes.

Look for the name Harper, stamped with the Harper cross. Very experienced with imitations—be sure it's the genuine! The saving is too little. There is no excuse for purchase of inferior Harper Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

Survivals from the Past in these Modern Days

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

WAS THATCHER, the English poet, who predicted the end of the world under changed, giving place to the millennium, but there are still wits to be found in these modern days enough, apparently, of the past to accommodate some of the time-honored methods of the ancients.

Take that other method about the executive proving the rule.

If you want to find an interesting example of this fact, go into a music store and ask for an Ocarina which is a small flute.

From 1871 to 1918 was the wedding years of the United States senator, but nobody is still the record of Senator Hoar as "the senator from Massachusetts." The United States Inspector under Look upon the dashes which, from the first letter to last word on the two pictures and read instead, words for wearing with you much. Expectations Heaven, to Lincoln" but could Tennyson have? No, nobody! Other years! Why—myself, mind.

Humor and sentimentalism are the two most extensive characteristics of the English publicity in the United States. There is dignity in the appearance of your coats with the red cuffs, the superior coloring and the general air of being thousands of miles away from the busy markets the yellow cities and those thousands that wander around the Orient. And the smallness! There's the traditional one of the commander in Yen, O Yen, O Yen—as the nine black-eyed justices led by the Chief Justice of the United States, the Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, file through the floor and take their places behind the long bench on the raised platform which overlooks the chamber. Appeals to be already with its quick relief—and it leaves no harmful after-effects. Any nagging sensation goes.

Look for the name Harper, stamped with the Harper cross. Very experienced with imitations—be sure it's the genuine! The saving is too little. There is no excuse for purchase of inferior Harper Aspirin tablets in the large bottles.

The Supreme court, you know, has its own bar, or groups of lawyers, admitted to practice before it. To be eligible for this a lawyer must first have a membership of the bar of the highest court in his own state for not less than three years and, more than that, he cannot be admitted to the bar of the supreme court unless he is sponsored by some member of that court. In every country to whose it gives its privileges, and that includes the country of Japan, the Several years ago an attorney appointed before the Supreme court in Washington who did not a year. He was immediately informed that he could not stand in such a place as that. He confined from the Supreme court. But years came back.

Away back in the early days of the Supreme court it was the custom to provide quill pens for the attorneys appearing before it. The use of the attorneys appearing before it. The use of the court. Tradition is working changed—but not the Supreme court of the United States! The modern type right on supplies quill pens and Uncle Sam, it seems, has large enough store that will down it.

Each lawyer's desk gets two pens. They are placed on the corner of a writing pad, since must be dried and white and one pen is placed over the other, in the manner of U. S. Above is a tray for small pads in connection to pen-files piled ready to use for each case. A small blue ribbon is most always in place. There is no telling what might happen if any change were made in that arrangement, for it would be resulting a tradition in the Federal States Supreme court and tradition is the NEVER must three.

Then one came very near being quiet and a national scandal was haven averted. It was noticed those who had Gladstone quill pens are noticed those who had Gladstone quill pens are noticed those who had Gladstone quill pens are

Tailor-Made Weather for Homes Now an Actuality

Slight Change Converts Heating Plant From One-Season Affair Into Year-Round Air Conditioning System.

Here's How Much Heat Your Body Generates From a Single Dinner.

Know that unfortunate lack of eating and not enjoy the vacation, for the Chesapeake effect in summer," says the chief heat institute of Threadbags of Hotbath Mills.

Eating is time, literally a field day guest. Heat is prompted in both cases. But the heat values of foods and of foods are measured by different standards. The energy is the heat unit for fluids. The British Thermal Unit is the measure used when heating engineers speak to fluids. These, one refers feet of standard and, one ounce 550 B. T. U.'s and one pound of coal from 10,000 to 16,000 B. T. U's.

How is a typical hot weather dinner menu, showing the amount of heat it generates to the body.

	Calories
Cold boiled ham	200
Buttered potatoes	100
Vegetable salad (tomato, cucumber, lettuce, with French dressing	200
Bread and butter	200
Ice cream	300
Fruited cake	200
Demi coffee with sugar	100
	1,300

How many calories person burns in B. T. U.'s depends in addition to the heat they exert from burning sugar in the body cells and fats, on the temperature in and to work on to keep going by breathing and digesting food.

When the first wave is at its hottest, when the body's skin is red with heat, when the sweat glands are working full blast, when the pores are open and the tissues are filled with blood, then comes the test. Can the body stand the temperature and still keep its normal 98.6 degrees? Can it keep cool?

Most of us, though, don't turn all the best energy of the food we eat into muscular energy consumed in exertion. Much of it remains in the form of heat. Physiology tells us that the internal temperature of the healthy body is 98.6 degrees. When the skin is cooler than that, heat flows from the body to the skin. When the skin is warmer than the body, heat flows from the skin to the body.

Body Throws Off Heat.

Thermostats are instruments placed on the walls of rooms, each one so adjusted that when the temperature falls to a certain point an electric current is sent to a motor down in the basement. This then operates a simple mechanism to open the draft door of the heating plant. When the temperature of the room registers one point in the adjusted point, the mechanism shuts off the draft. In closely similar manner, the Holland Institute of Thermology explains the body controls its own temperature. This is done through four safety valves.

One of these is radiation. The body has throngs of its excesses heat to surrounding objects. But during extreme hot weather, this safety valve when the weather is "muggy" as well as hot, it is not completely. "If 98% of the heat 0% the humidity," the air contains so much moisture absorb from other sources that it can't absorb much heat from the skin.

That's the condition when the humidity is high and the air is stagnant. But suppose that the air isn't stagnant, but is moving past and around the body with a lively velocity. Whenever a portion of moisture is taken from the body, it will be replaced more quickly and more air will come along to repeat the process. So the air's movement will give us relief by increasing evaporation.

All of which, moreover, is the chief thing that makes conviction. Of course, when the air is hot and moving rapidly, it conveys heat to the body, rather than from it. But conditions seldom are so severe that this occurs. Usually, air moving with a temperature even slightly below that of the body, is helpful.

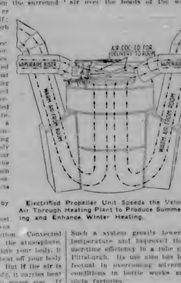
So we see that radiation, convection and evaporation are the body's three great safety valves, that conduction is a minor one, and that air movement is a factor that influences four of them. All present-day air cooling finding engineering, the Holland Institute of Thermology states, is based on those facts of physiology.

Moving Air Brings Coolness.

In fact, one of the basic principles of the branch of science, as given in the engineers' "Guide Book" is that "Air motion makes any moderate condition feel cooler." One of the furnished rom rules stated in the twelve years of concern this entertainment theme part in this way: "All motion exerts a cooling effect on the human body in atmospheres where the temperature is less than that of the body."

This principle is applied in many industrial plants to improve working conditions. In two English theatre factories through which the air was driven to moderate velocity, the production during hot weather was found to be 12 per cent higher than in two other similar mills that were unventilated. In Atlantic Texas the temperature in engine rooms has frequently been reduced from 90 to 70 degrees by means of air motion.

Similar effects have been obtained in American industries. Forced air blasts have been introduced to fill air over the heads of the workers.



Electrified Propeller Unit Speeds the Velocity of Air Through Heating Plant to Produce Summer Cooling and Enhance Winter Heating.

Such a system greatly lowered the temperature and improved the sedentative efficiency in a cube plant in Philadelphia. Its use has been found fectual in overcoming adverse heat conditions in textile weaving and textile factories.

Heating System Used for Cooling.

If more air motion proves small a mighty comfort producer in humanity's buildings, why can't it also be used for the same purpose in homes? It can, the engineers of the Holland Institute reply; and that is precisely what has been done by the leaders of the water air heating industry. They have converted the home heating plant from a one-season affair into an all-year-round air conditioning system, which also operates in winter as well as in summer. Here is how the system is cooling effect on the temperature is less than that of the body."

The principle is applied in many industrial plants to improve working conditions. In two English theatre factories through which the air was driven to moderate velocity, the production during hot weather was found to be 12 per cent higher than in two other similar mills that were unventilated. In Ancient Days the Punkah Gave Relief From the Heat.

mechanical energy to keep the wheels that give cooling, so the body conserves part of the energy in its food into muscular energy for the performance of work.

Heat Carried Off by Air.

But one of the most important ways that surplus energy is the thing, convection. Connected heat is conveyed to the atmosphere. If the air is cooler than your body, it breathes some of the heat off your body and carries it away. But if the air is warmer than your body, it carries heat to you and makes matters worse. If body temperature and air temperature are the same, there is no heat exchange between them.

We have many conditions in which these three safety valves don't operate to relieve the excessive heat generated in the body. Then we use the extraordinary conditions which we call "sitting" and "sweltering," when all the objects surrounding the body are too warm to absorb its surplus heat and we are in an room to convey any of its heat away. What can happen to serve as an emergency valve?

As a matter of fact, what does happen? The body perspires, and the sweat is evaporated. Now, one of the many principles of physics is that evaporation causes cooling. So perspiration really is one of the fundamental heat regulators. But the trouble is, it is one of the most efficient when we have the least need of excessive warmth. Anything that promotes the evaporation of perspiration is a great aid to comfort.

Humidity Important Factor.

Of course the relative humidity of the air has much to do with this. When the relative humidity is high and also the weather is "muggy" as well as hot, perspiration will not evaporate. On the other hand, if the humidity, the air contains so much moisture absorb from other sources that it can't tieth per capita that of the United States. Moreover in the rest of the world, especially in Europe, mass production has been established, with wages no higher than before the World War, hence, with no increase in consuming power. In the United States wages have risen more than one-half since before the World War, with consequent increase in consuming power. The claim that under such circumstances the United States stands to gain by yielding its markets to competitors wielding a weapon of cheapness secured through the low wage system, in order that we may take the chance of getting larger sales in foreign markets increasingly glutted with goods because consuming power fails far short of keeping up with productive capacity, has no weight if applied to the general welfare of American industry or of the American people.

BIG BUSINESS SPEAKS REGARDING TARIFF

The business ought to begin to learn the folly of seeking its own ends without regard to the welfare of the American people. Its demands for low tariffs in order that its foreign adventures may be prospered, has already created widespread distress in certain industries, notably the oil and lumber industries, and this depression and unemployment has cost these same big interests billions where foreign enterprises have yielded only millions. The seventeen and a half billions American capitalists have invested for quick profits at great risk abroad, are of small consequence as compared with the remaining 95 per cent of the wealth. The 95 per cent should not be sacrificed for the 5 per cent.

Lowering of the American tariff, and the admission of larger quantities of foreign goods, would not lower a foreign tariff or enable a nation to get a dollar's worth of American products in foreign lands. What it would do would be to stimulate American investments in cheap labor countries abroad, to increase the glut of goods for which there can be no outlet there until consuming power is increased through better pay for workers. The present big drive for lowering of the tariff, which big business is carrying on through the metropolitan press, is intended to promote the profits of a few bankers and industrialists at a great sacrifice of the producing and consuming power of the United States.

SEARS PURCHASE RAMONA PARK HOTEL

NEW OWNERS TO OPEN FOR BUSINESS JULY 1; EXTENSIVE IMPROVEMENTS PLANNED THIS YEAR; ENTIRE PROPERTY TO BE DEVELOPED.

Ramona Park Hotel, located 3 miles east of Harbor Springs, on Little Traverse Bay, and all the unsold land formerly known as Traverse Shores Country Club, has become the property of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin C. Sears of Charlevoix.

The hotel and country club site with more than 115 lots and a half mile of shore line on Little Traverse Bay is valued between $150,000 and $200,000.

Formal opening under the new owners will be July 1. Mr. Sears will manage the hotel this summer. The season will extend to September 20. Mrs. Sears, who has been manager of the Belvedere Hotel in Charlevoix for seven seasons, will remain there in the same capacity this summer. She will come to Harbor Springs to assist Mr. Sears during the 1932 season.

Widely known as one of the finest resort hotels in Michigan, the Ramona Park hotel will be greatly improved under the extensive program outlined by the new owners. No detail will be overlooked by make the service and management of the hotel satisfactory to guests, Mr. and Mrs. Sears announced.

Strictly Modern

Containing 165 rooms and suites, with private baths, telephone and electric elevator service and excellent furniture throughout, Ramona Park Hotel has every attraction for its guests, said Mr. Sears. All but 19 rooms have a bay front view. Accommodations are available for 180 guests.

Other features of the hotel are the 18-hole indoor golf course in the basement, beautiful dining room floating on the bay, a tennis court on the hotel grounds, boating, swimming and fishing all available to the guests. A riding academy is maintained within a short distance of the hotel and the Ramona Park Club nearby offers opportunity for dancing and cabaret entertainment.

Work will be started immediately redecorating the interior of the hotel. A considerable amount of new furniture will be purchased.

Plan Landscaping Project

Several thousand shrubbery will be spent on the preliminary landscaping project on the hotel grounds. Plans are made for arbors, rose gardens, and rock gardens. This project also will be started soon. There are several more improvements, of a minor nature, but damage to the natural scenic beauty of the spot, Mr. Sears announced.

Mr. Sears announces that he will make a specialty in offering excellent dining room service. This is one phase of the hotel management, which Mr. Sears believes is extremely important.

Development of the entire area is planned by the new owners. Building lots will be cleared and improved to offer for sale this summer. The work will be continued throughout the winter season, Mr. Sears said.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Sears are highly recommended by guests and patrons of the Belvedere Hotel where they have been for seven years.

The famous Ramona stream, with 12½ feet, deep, flowing 10,800 barrels of water daily at an amazing temperature of 45 degrees supplies the water for the hotel. A new water system has been installed.

Ramona Park Hotel Changes Hands

One of the finest resort hotels in Michigan, the Ramona Park, on the shore of Little Traverse Bay, three miles east of Harbor Springs, was purchased recently by Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Sears of Charlevoix. Formal opening under the new owners will be July 1.

MACKINAC ISLAND PIONEER DIES SUDDENLY SATURDAY

W. B. "Pet" Chambers, about 68 years old, former Mayor and lifelong resident of Mackinac Island, died suddenly last Saturday. Funeral service and burial was Monday at the Island. He was a brother of Barney Chambers, who moved from Charlevoix to Mackinac Island recently and a cousin of Captain John N. Chambers of this city.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH CO. TO OPEN SERVICE HERE

A. J. Jarvis, Superintendent of the Postal Telegraph Co. with offices in Chicago was here early this week making preparatory arrangements for opening a commercial office in the downtown district. According to present plans the office will be located in the E. A. Young building, 224 Bridge Street, and will be opened for service on or before July first.

WRECKS AND COLLISIONS NUMEROUS RECENTLY

The past few days have been disastrous to car owners in that seven of nine wrecks, after another, those eight or ten machines, some north, some south and several with in the city limits, have been more or less demolished. Some through collision, others from various causes, personal injuries, if any, were of a minor nature, but damage to the several machines total in the aggregate, a good size figure.

Mrs. S. T. Billow and her mother, Mrs. Flora Goodmar of Detroit arrived here Thursday and are located for the summer season, 210 Park Avenue, for the season.

Furnishes sulphur water in abundance.

Homer Sly, Petoskey, chairman of the Landscaping Committee, with Wilkins G. McCune and Leon Fischer negotiated with Mr. and Mrs. Sears in the contract. The property passed into the hands of the Redemption May 6, when the redemption period expired on a $70,000 mortgage.—Emmet County Graphic.

TWO YOUNG MEN CAUGHT BY LOCAL CHIEF OF POLICE

Two young men, Nathe J. Burrows, who gives his address as 410 Bond 11th Street and Walter Taylor, 1015 East Front Street, Traverse City, were picked up by Chief of Police Charles Jefferies Thursday as they were driving across the bridge. They were wanted for investigation in connection with the robbery of the Gunther's Gas Service station at Petoskey earlier in the day when $40 were extracted from the cash box. The lads did not have the money with them and at first protested their innocence. Later they found where the funds had been secreted at some point north of Charlevoix. The money was returned to the rightful owner. No disposition has been made of the case against the boys. It is possible that charges against the delinquents may not be pressed.

QUEEN SELECTION MADE

By the decision of a committee appointed by the Charlevoix Association of Commerce, Miss Dorothy Struthers has been selected to represent the city of the fair" at the Annual Cherry Festival scheduled to be held at Traverse City July 15-16-17.

There were several young ladies, candidates for the honor of reigning as Queen during the three day event. A selection was probably made at a late hour last night at the Lyric Theatre at Traverse City, but time for us to announce in the issue of the Sentinel.

All candidates for the honor of being Queen were required to appear on the stage of the theatre when the selection was made, which comes from the committee at the theatre, after which the committee in charge will render their final decision. Naturally the local Charlevoix committee, the friends of Miss Struthers, as well as the public generally, will be pleased if the decision of the committee in charge coincides with that of the committee selected by the Charlevoix Association of Commerce.

Thus far the candidates selected from Beverly Struthers, Charlevoix; Naomi Hooker, Petoskey; Treswa Cole, Manistee; Dorothy Currier, Cadillac; Dolora Munro, Elk Rapids; Grace Ervin, Harbor Springs; Maxine Weaver, Traverse City; June Tompkins, Old Mission; Dora Rose, Empire; May Call, Beulah.

Mrs. George L. Warner and Miss Caroline F. Smith are located at their cottage No. 145 on the Belvedere Club grounds for the season. They arrived from Chicago Wednesday of this week.

Captain James Sanford was in command of the S. S. Sanford when it left this port for St. James Monday, taking the place of Captain John N. Chambers who was called to Mackinac Island for a day or two.

Mr. and Mrs. John Grunsell of Chicago, arrived here Monday and will occupy their summer home, Cottage No. 147, on the Belvedere Club for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. E. Wright and Mr. Wright's sister, Mrs. Creedon, motored up from Chicago early this week and are at their Norwood summer home for a two weeks period.

HEALTH MEET HELD THURSDAY

OTHER GATHERINGS SCHEDULED FOR JULY

The June meeting of the County Child Health Committee was held last Thursday afternoon at Bear Lake Grange with an attendance of 45.

Dr. Quinlan discussed the summer dental program and solicited the cooperation of the Committee in helping to make this event a success.

Dr. Dean reported that according to the statistics of 1929-30 the infant mortality rate in the counties of this unit were among the highest in any part of the State, but the year 1930 showed a much lower rate.

Dr. Gibson, director of the dental division of the Children's Fund of Michigan, gave a brief talk on the work of the committee in carrying on a successful Public Health program.

Miss Congdon discussed the course of classes on Infant and Maternal Hygiene to be held throughout the county during the month of July. There will be one class each week for four consecutive weeks. Dr. Fransen M. Hennessy urged the committee to cooperate in the organization of these classes, stating that meetings are open to women and girls that are Juniors and Seniors in high school. Topics to be discussed will include infant and prenatal care, Home Hygiene and child management. The first night of the class will be in informal talk and discussion and the last half taken up with demonstration work.

The Committee accepted the invitation of Miss Geiken to meet in the Wednesday afternoon, June 17th at 2 o'clock, with Mrs. Allen Campbell. The subject for discussion is "Physical Conditions in Porto Rico", Mrs. Ernest Staley, leader.

S. T. Gilbert and party made a trip to Buckwaxus Bay last week with the yacht Sylvia G. They returned from the trip Monday, bringing with them a wonderful catch of fresh trout many of which for this sportsmen of fish were extra large.

The Congregational Ladies' Aid will hold a Bake Sale Saturday, June 20th.

Fred Smith of Elk Rapids and son Howard Smith, the latter of Detroit, visited friends in Charlevoix Tuesday.

LEGIONNAIRES HOLD BIG MEET

ANNUAL CONVENTION IN SESSION SUNDAY

Featured by a big parade, musical bands, ball games and climax the annual convention of Legionnaires and Auxiliaries viewed their native heir here Sunday after having enjoyed a most helpful and successful meeting of the 122nd Executive District headquarters.

Dewaay was chosen as the place of meeting for the 1932 convention Mr. Otto C. Stolz—" Planning good time for the delegates. Address for the local Legion home in Charlevoix and was also elected as district executive board member and was carried with it the opportunity of attending as a delegate, the state convention to be held at Detroit next month.

The parade Sunday afternoon was an elaborate, interesting affair. It marched the town and through the main streets participating units were Petoskey, Charlevoix, Traverse City, Boyne City, Harbor Springs, and also the new Charlevoix organization.

Several hundred delegates were in attendance at the meeting. Nationals were there hundreds of others in the Auxiliaries other than delegates, many from distant points to witness the annual event.

D. S. PAYTON RESIGNS OFFICE

THIRTEEN YEARS IN POSITION OF CITY CLERK

For the past thirteen years Dr. S. Payton, active as City Clerk has been the official who furnished information to the world, members of the Common Council and the public with facts and figures relative to the financial condition of the City of Charlevoix. The past of departmental city business during those years has been directly under his personal jurisdiction and for the years of service in office he has demonstrated an ability to efficiently handle the work satisfactorily to the public.

That Mr. Payton retires from further service is a matter of regret. He has had years of experience in his line of work, many of them prior to his taking on the city job thirteen years ago, therefore was eminently the man to take up the city job. Day in and day out, month after month, found him at his post of duty. Regular office hours were with him an unknown quantity. If there was work requiring his attention you would find him at his office until far into the night. Doing the work and doing it well was his aim, rightly followed.

Some weeks ago Mr. Payton's health failed making him unable to carry on the work. Hence his voluntary retirement. He was critically ill for some weeks. Today he is much better physically than for many months, and continues to improve from day to day. However he has decided to retire from active work and from this time will take life easy by taking a well earned vacation.

According to present plans Mr. Payton will remain in Charlevoix through the summer. With the approach of winter he contemplates going to the West Coast to spend some time with his sister at San Diego, California.

Machines That Are Almost Human

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Robot Plowman

SCIENTISTS, in inventing robots, these soulless machines designed to free men's hands from the drudgery of labor, have not neglected the farmer.

The farmer, of course, benefits along with the rest of humanity from the push button, but there are also machines of his own designation as well as labor savers. He has a robot that tests seeds for the germ content, and another that grades them according to size. Still another robot can milk cows, and there are firemen as attentive as canaries in their supervision.

The use of the attractive but tiny source of mysterious power is extensively being employed on the farm. Machines controlling "artificial daylight" in poultry houses, make the hens lay more eggs, and increase the growth of poultry for the market.

The use of these new aids directly, or indirectly by subjecting fertilizers to them, is appearing in the crop reports, the soil doubling the size and number of its crops.

Capital Rat Catcher Gives Up Job

Washington.—The Pied Piper has quit. A lifetime combing of muffins more inspiring than luring rats to their bourne whence no traveler returns, terms holds no charms for A. Gentry, rat catcher in ordinary of the National Capital. Gentry's soul chastens loftier ambitions.

"Rats?" he said, in consenting on his resignation. "Big rats, little rats, fat rats, scrawny rats—they're all just rats to me.

"And after you have succeeded in trapping them what have you to show for your pains. Just title and ill cause no hour. I tell you, sir, a man's life is too important to be frittered away in that fashion."

"You may well say that catching federal rats is a public service, and many said boy. I've caught some big ones in my time, but I have been more interested to the conclusion that our trapping is not my mettier. There's no future in it. A long train of deceased rodents—nothing more."

Gentry's nightly feud with the fed-eral rats is fought out on a field of the most open character—the old Center market district. It was here a short time ago that two young ladies from Virginia—students of Investigation—were frightened out of several nights' rounds by a specter of the genus circumlocution and defying them to enter. It took the backbone of a uniformed lieutenant of police to disperse.

So A. Gentry, rat, champion prestidigitator of the Capital, is now a free agent. Whether he will take up the trade of his fathers and his fathers' fathers before him, or will seek other employment, he will not say.

"Will you tell us of our rats?"

"Hmmm."

"Well, it was a night for several nights consecutive that I heard that voice behind me hissed. Into where they are he would not name for publication. Though this is a family of fat rats, fat rodents. Prairie dogs, mink and ferrets."

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

I had never seen a phantasmagram, and except for an occasional passing gondola would not have been sure of it. In fact, in preliminary conversation on the subject, I inadvertently referred to it as a marathon, despite the fact that the difference is as that between day and night. It does, to be sure, show the ebb and flow of the tides in their courses, but it is a diurnal sun, up now when your Kinsmen dining-sided in Utah interment bowl that day and the sky.

Whoever created that weird and wonderful machine, will it come into some misbegotten source from Mars, Merton and all the storied neighbors, should be immediately installed in the invention is just so much mystery to me. I can only report that I thought I saw by dozens of rays of what seemed to be electric buttons and switches. Apparently, the manipulator ran place himself on any portion of the exercise surface he desires basking at the sky from Northern, southern or equatorial angles, and, left, Doctor Baker was operating to take a couple of the contests, one a mere photo, showing them the Southern Cross. I soon had to take it back to the Bowery and all.

HONOR FOR HEROINE

As you grow up at the interior of the Sun again which continuously and moving objects of light are cast, you have a feeling of being one of them. It gives you the feeling of looking at the true sky. When the machine is run at speed, you feel decided appreciation for Venus descending the sun, and considerable sympathy for little Mercury, trying just as desperately to catch up. Saturn, a luminous planet, took my eye to Venus as she flashes by, but contrary to any mythological sendoff, she neither passes nor notices him. Jupiter and Mars must be tired business men. They stay out all night. Mercurius is apparently a cop on fixed post.

One reason I never had seen a planetarium is that the only one in the United States is the gift of Mrs Adler to the city of Chicago. It stands on a little island in the lake, near the Field museum, and has the general form of an observatory. I believe there are several planetariums in germany, and there is soon to be one in Philadelphia, in spite of the cost, which will run considerable. I can't see why there is not a planetarium in every large city in the country. It is one of the greatest instructional devices ever invented. The invention in China to enable any person to see at home the wonders of the sky, as well as the sun, and carries into many school activities, is an hour that they would learn from any ordinary course in months. It is an inexpensive proposition, costing an indefinite trifle more. Now, what a planetarium means to a library super-excited. Why an idea a

This is included in the communication sent to the president which has just been signed by the government printing office.

Other recommendations of the commission include the extension of 40 square miles of ridges and valleys along the Snake river, which it said would be necessary to conserve the elk attracted from the park. Steel Pillow in America

In this country, about 1797, John Hawkins of Connecticut, invented the pillow. It was similar to machines which have been developed extensively before in England. He also made improvements in the cotton gin.

PUTTING THE LAW TO WORK

In this country there is a quaint old custom among legislators of passing laws without giving thought to their practicability. After an impracticable law has been passed, the police have to exercise discretion in enforcing it.

"Such discretion," writes William L. Shonery, one of the most vigorous commentators on current topics, "is an open and an irresistible invitation to bribery. Human nature being what it is, weak and greedy officials will inevitably use their opportunities corruptly or at least unfairly."

This habit of heedless legislation, of writing hopes and aspirations into laws regardless of the consequences, goes deep into history.

Nearly every city that writes into its building codes provisions which are not enforced and which often never were intended to be enforced.

If anyone is looking for real signs of sensible progress in this country, he may well consider the existing motor laws. A few years ago in nearly every State in the Union most of its statute books traffic laws which few obeyed. Speed was ridiculously limited. Fifteen and twenty miles an hour were the common legal limits in villages and cities. Of course the laws were ignored, but the consequence was a great deal of petty corruption on the part of greedy enforcement officers.

In recent years traffic regulation laws have been reasonably modified. As the law and prevailing custom used to coincide, less a board of bribery and injustice. This kind of corruption is fading out.

Of the anti-trust laws were designed to stop the formation of big corporations and to accelerate the development of small business. The law was meant to keep business small at a time when the railroads, telegraphs, telephones and other tools of mechanical invention made it profitable for men to operate large organizations. The experience has been that the law has been tortured into meanings utterly meritorious. The law has not been able to check the inevitable economic drift, but it has made for indirection, insincerity and corruption. The fact is that the legislators who made these laws ignored the facts of economic life. Today the decisions of the Supreme Court and not the laws of any State or of the United States are the actual guides of business.

TAX DEFLATION

"Forces are gathering for the next period of prosperity," says The Insurance Field, editorially. "When a firm takes inventory it generally slows down on everything else until the process of itemization is finished. For eighteen months the whole world has been taking inventory of itself, and industry has slowed down while undergoing the most searching of scrutiny from all directions.

"In this microscopic analysis of costs and expenses, the influence of taxation should not escape expert attention. Why not deflate taxation along with other things? Why not seize the psychological moment to show how much business expense is due to excessive cost of government, and the extent to which excessive cost of government grows out of governmental interference and competition with private business?

"Take a state, for example, with ten billions of private tangible wealth, one billion of income and $100,000,000 of net annual private profits. Taxes, to defray cost of government, total $25,000,000—which is one-fourth of the entire net annual profit. Now, suppose that state to become infected with the virus of governmental invasion. Its cities convert their gas, electric, water and street railway corporations into municipally-owned public utilities. The state establishes governmentally operated funds for insurance, and takes control of water power development. Result: The total of private tangible wealth is reduced to nine billions, the gross income of that state's private citizens falls to 900 millions, the net annual profit to $90,000,000—and the taxes incurred by the newly operated all those units of governmentally competing business) have to go up to $35,000,000. That means a rate of nearly 39 per cent on private profits!

"The people, who once had a free balance of $75,000,000 a year above the cost of living and being governed, now have only $55,000,000 left. What looks like an improvement of only ten extra millions if the two tax totals be compared, turns out in effect to be a governmental charge of twenty mill ins. Worse, it falls upon smaller private properties and fewer people.

"In that condition of $22,000,000 by government from private affairs resides the germ of unemployment, and the microbe of a lower living standard for American industry and American wage-earners.

"Approximately just that is what has been going on slowly but surely in America, and will keep going on unless and until stopped. Such a movement will not stop itself—the maw of government goes on swallowing to the bitter end."

TOO MUCH REGULATION

In a recent address on "The Changing Times," P. W. Robinson, Vice-president of the Union Pacific System, reviews the present transportation situation.

He points out that when the railroads were returned to private hands after the war, a definite program of construction was started with a view to making the greatest possible improvement in service. As a result, the American railroads are more efficient, and do their work more economically, than at any other time in their existence but their earnings have for years been below a "Fair Return."

Oil and gas pipe lines, buses and trucks, airways and inland waterways, are all receiving a certain amount of business that once went to railroads. That these various carriers serve a useful purpose goes without saying. But railroads are our most regulated industry—and their competitors, for the most part, are either unregulated or regulation is less severe. Mr. Robinson says, "Railroad men do not complain of fair competition. They do protest against unfair competition."

The principal sufferers from the situation at present are the railroad employes and stockholders. But if railroad earnings continue to dwindle, the public will feel the results in lost taxes and lowered railroad service—a service which is still and perhaps always will be, the mainstay of transportation.

There are two ways out—A mort illeral policy toward the railroads, or subjecting other carriers to the railroad type of regulation. The latter course is probably the better one from all standpoints, for too much regulation has helped put the railroads where they are today.

UP IT GOES

Ten states have increased their gasoline tax rates so far this year, and others are contemplating similar moves. At present the average tax rate for the nation is 3.98 cents per gallon and it may exceed 4 cents before the dawn of 1932.

However, it is interesting to note that the new high rates went into effect in the face of constantly growing opposition. In North Dakota, for example, the voters defeated a projected increase on a referendum proposal in November 1930 to raise the legislature pass it later on.

In Washington, where the rate was jacked up 2 cents a gallon, motorists are busy seeking a referendum, and a one-cent increase in Maine was passed until after a long and bitter battle in the legislature.

It may be that the tendency toward higher rates will be a good thing after all—the higher the tax goes, the sooner the public will take action. "Worm motorist" is rapidly reaching the point where he will turn, as five and six-cent tax rates stare him in the face.

SMALL ARMS AND NATIONAL DEFENSE

An important point that crusaders for antigun laws apparently overlook is that the small arm and the small arms industry is vital to our national defense.

Their experience with guns as civilians is largely responsible for the efficiency of green American troops in all wars. Our gun manufacturing industry has always been ready to turn its facilities to producing large quantities of arms for the government when the need arose.

To deprive a citizen of the right to own his gun is tantamount to depriving him of part of his heritage. The American has always been noted for his interest in sport. Shooting for pleasure is certainly a harmless diversion—and it is one that may serve well on some occasion. The constitutional right to possess and bear arms should be respected.

Punish those who misuse a gun but don't do so at the expense of the law-abiding.

The only way taxes can be controlled is to limit the functions of government.

It is an ironical fact that millions of voters gow complaining of high taxes have been responsible for increasing taxes by broadening official functions and increasing the number of departments. Many who oppose paternalism in theory support it in practice because of personal prejudice and selfish bias.

When government goes into business individual rights are abrogated and public expense increased. In condemning bureaucracy we must condemn ourselves for fostering and encouraging it.

We get as good government as we deserve by our actions. If democracy fails the responsibility and the blame belong to the people for not curbing official ism. We talk of freedom and tax reduction and individualism—and, when action is necessary, most of us fail to uphold our cherished ideals in casting our vote.

Although 2,925,000 automobiles were consigned to the junk heap last year there are in service today more than 3,000,000 cars produced seven years ago or earlier, according to a study made by the Silvertown Safety League. Figures on old cars in service were gathered because of a wide-spread opinion that superannuated vehicles on the roads tend to be a menace to the safety of highway users. In recognition of this condition, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has sponsored a Highway Safety Program under which dealers are encouraged to junk old cars they acquire in trades. and the Silvertown Safety League has heartily endorsed the plan.

If Congress repealed the eighteenth amendment what would the people blame crime on?

OFFICIAL NEWS PREPARED BY DEPARTMENT OF CONSERVATION

Lansing, June 10—Regulations unchanged from last year, the open season for bass, bluegills and sunfish starts June 29. At that time all lakes and streams will be open to fishing for all game and non-game fish. Only two species are protected throughout the year, grayling and muskellunge.

Size and possession limits were unchanged by the 1931 legislature. The black bass size limit is ten inches with a creel limit of five per day or in possession at one time. Twenty-five is the daily limit for calico, rock, strawberry, white and warmouth bass, crappies, bluegills, sunfish and perch or any combination of these species.

A state map combining the features of the maps formerly issued annually by the State Highway Department and of those formerly issued by the Department of Conservation, is now available for public distribution.

The "official Michigan Service Map" is in order to facilitate easy reading. On it, in addition to indicated hard surfaced, improved and earth roads and roads under construction, are shown state parks, fish hatcheries, trout streams, game refuges, state and national forests, forest fire towers, airports, golf links and other information.

All of the better known rivers, streams and inland lakes are marked on the map.

The back of the map is covered with pictures of beauty spots of parts of Michigan. Details concerning various conservation projects and of the various state parks are given.

Maps will be sent to all state park superintendents and to the various tourist and resort associations to be distributed to the public. Copies may also be obtained directly from the Lansing offices of the Michigan Conservation Department.

Six Isle Royale commercial fishermen paid fines and costs aggregating $250.00 when they were convicted of commercial fishing without licenses.

SHOULD YOUR BUSINESS BE GOVERNMENT OWNED

An ardent advocate of government ownership of public utilities recently said, "The only way public utility service may be regulated is either through government ownership or private ownership." Further, he argued, utilities should be operated as a business based on profit to the private gain. He said public utilities are, in fact, public property since the conditions of the utilities depend in most cases on use of city streets and right-of-way provisions. In closing his argument, he classed public utilities as nearly as essential as food.

As a matter of fact, there is a strict regulation of public utilities in practically every state. If we assume that regulation is not sufficient, we challenge the integrity and ability of all regulatory public officials and, in doing that, we might as well abolish our whole elective or appointive governmental system.

Should we elect or appoint better men to regulate public utilities if the government owned them? The thoughtful person would answer, No, for we would have to depend on the same human beings. The only difference would be that the liabilities and obligations of taxpayers would be increased many fold for they would be liable for all losses and mistakes in judgment under government ownership.

The argument that utilities should be operated as a public benefit and not for profit is the socialistic argument against private ownership of property and private profits. This argument is contrary to the ideals upon which this government was founded and is in line with the Russian paternalistic program under which the government completely dominates the individual.

The argument that public utilities are public property because they use the streets, if generally applied, would mean that practically every line of business is public property for they all depend on the streets to carry on their operations. What would become of grocery stores, dairies, newspapers, express companies, department stores, fuel companies, business and factories of every description without the free and unobstructed use of streets and highways? As a matter of fact, public utilities quite often pay heavily in franchise taxes, etc., for such use as they make of the streets in addition to the regular taxes assessed against them the same as against all other property owners.

When it comes to classing a public utility as "nearly as essential as food," the argument for public ownership breaks down entirely. If, because an industry is essential or a necessity, it should be publicly owned, why should not food, milk, meat and clothing be owned by the government and sold to the people at cost long before public utility service?

It would be inconvenient to get along without electricity or gas but no one would actually suffer and substitutes would be used. How long, however, could the public get along without food, milk, meat or clothing? It seems almost childish to place public utilities first on the list. Food, clothing and rent take practically all of the average family's income. Electric and gas service costs such a small part that it is almost negligible.

From the standpoint of benefiting the people by government ownership of power, entirely aside from the really fundamental problem of whether we desire to change our basic form of government, the average family income would benefit less financially from "power at cost" under government ownership than it would if the government furnished it free garbage service.

How much better it would be if our political friends would study how to reduce taxes which fall so heavily on all families, instead of figuring ways to establish tax-exempt government-subsidized industries that destroy private enterprise—owned by millions of citizens working to make a living, pay taxes and maintain government.

WHAT A STATE!

Michigan is a great state! Great in extent and in scenic beauty. Great in its natural resources. Great in its history, its traditions, and the character and spirit of its citizens.

Consider its mines and forests; its fertile fields and its productive orchards, pierced and zoned into the beautiful lakes and streams; its diversified industries and its splendid educational institutions.

Michigan is a good place in which to live! Here Nature is kind. Here are found the most desirable of drought or other disasters to any degree. Nowhere else can people work more profitably nor under better conditions than in Michigan.

And no state has more to offer to the tourist, whether from outside or within the state, than has Michigan. Our Company, through its advertising columns of the Michigan press, has steadily called attention to the advantages of Michigan as a vacation land.

We hold that it is in the interest of every concern and every individual in Michigan, first to contemplate and appreciate the privileges and advantages of working and playing in Michigan and, second, to call the attention of others, near and far, and of state, to these facts, continuously and by every proper means that will not be offensive to the good sense of every individual, every business and every community.

Michigan is a great state to live in

THOMAS ARKLE CLARK

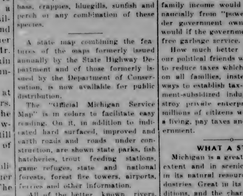
"Guide, philosopher and friend"—that is what Thomas Arkle Clark has been for more than a quarter of a century to the thousands of young men who have attended the University of Illinois. For "Tommy Arkle," as he is affectionately known to the students at that institution, has been dean of men there since 1909, and it is doubtful if any other educator in America has a wider acquaintance among the alumni of an institution of learning than the parents of the students than has Dean Clark.

And the same qualities—the kindly, sympathetic, understanding nature and the keen understanding of human nature and of human problems for which he is so well known by his many alumni—are reflected in his writings, such as his educational essays appearing in this newspaper, and have made him one of the most widely known writers in America today. Thousands of appreciative readers, who have never been Dean Clark in a native are, but who have read of his career has been spent in that state. Here near Monroe, Ill., May 11, 1862, he was graduated from the University of Illinois in 1890, and became an instructor in English and Latin in the academy at that institution the next year. From 1895 to 1899 he was on the faculty of the English department and served as acting dean of the college of literature and arts in 1900-01. He was made dean of undergraduates in 1901 and eight years later became dean of men.

Dean Clark did graduate work at Chicago University and at Harvard and has received honorary degrees from Knox college and the College of Wooster. He is the author of various works on English composition and the following books: "Great American Authors," "Great English Authors," "The Reader Right O'clock," "The Fraternity and the College," "The Fraternity and the College," "The Student Right O'clock," "The Fraternity and the College," "The Fraternity and the Undergraduate," "The High School Hat and His Problems," "Discipline and the Fraternity" and "When You Write a Letter."

In his essays such as are appearing in this newspaper, will be found a wealth of practical advice, of good "common sense," in dealing with our everyday problems. And we believe that our readers will not only enjoy reading Dean Clark's articles, but that they will want to tell their friend's about them so that they may enjoy them too.

MICHIGAN BELL TELEPHONE CO.



There's health and happiness for children in a Michigan vacation

Have your boy or girl telephone home frequently from camp

MICHIGAN is unexcelled as a summer playground for children. Scores of summer camps dot the shores of Michigan's lakes, offering every out-of-door advantage for an enjoyable, health-building vacation.

While the children are in camp, have them telephone home at pre-arranged intervals. Occasional "telephone visits" will help prevent homesickness and will banish your worries.

Long distance rates are surprisingly low

Job at Least Spared Affliction of Bunions

Job, of course, did have boils. But Job had no bunions. Having no bunions, too—like many of us—lived and most willingly knowing how lucky he was, added to these boils of his, our good averaged-sized Samson would never have forced Job to abandon his pellet of straw, neutrality, nurse tool and die.

It is next to impossible to stand a bunion—and utterly impossible to stand upon a bunion—when that misfortune is the only bodily affliction of the moment. No man could tolerate one on top of a bunch of boils.

The word bunion is a perfectly legitimate derivative of "union," meaning to weep. The "n" was omitted to supply the adage—and how!

For downright, 100 per cent sting, a bunion has the ordinary or garden variety of honey boucher backed off the big end. Which, by the way, is a mighty good place to look if you are hunting bunions. It may not be found right on the toe, but you may be sure it is not far away.

A bunion is a thin sort of thing this being the reason for its rigid insistence upon the big (or largest) toe. The little toe, for instance, would never do! Oh, dear, no—it isn't dude, my dear! A bunion demands to be the whole works. And it is.—Omaha World-Herald.

Barnacles

While there are various species of barnacle, the common goose barnacle attaches itself to floating timbers, the bottoms of ships, etc., as this it is necessary for ocean vessels, especially wooden ships, to go into drydock at regular intervals to have these barnacles removed. The barnacle is a shellfish of the crustacean order, related to the crab and shrimp. It develops a long muscular stalk by which to attach itself to smooth surfaces. Special plates are objects of a protect which grow to French Scott Key the author them. Tipped by the stalk, the creature is then placing a live which is said to be the largest single one known across is removing. This membrane is then constructed, bearing a barnacles' portion of Key surrounded by other animal life. Barnacles have been exerted by any recorded earthquake.

They Gave Us "The Star Spangled Banner"

Base of Key Memorial Monument at Baltimore

The Key Bridge, Washington, D.C.

House in Baltimore where original "Star Spangled Banner" was made

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

THE other day a group of people gathered in the crypt of the majestic Capitol in Washington in our National Capitol and witnessed a ceremony which was conducted by the Daughters of Columbia wherever of the United States Daughters of 1812. The principal speakers on that occasion were Mrs. Francis Scott Key, great-granddaughter of Francis Scott Key. Those present were privileged to see the original manuscript in hand of the man who gave to the American flag, almost forthwith we celebrate on June 14, the name of "The Star Spangled Banner" and who gave to America its national anthem.

There are, three other interesting memorials where perpetuate the name of Francis Scott Key, two of them in the immediate which stands that his grave in Mt. Olivet cemetery in Frederick, Md. The in by a tablet inscribed "Written by Francis Scott Key, Baltimore, September 14, 1814." The other memorial, and the most famous of all, is a tablet inscribed "Written by Francis Scott Key, Baltimore, September 13, 1814," and there follows the lines of "The Star Spangled Banner." Another is the huge memorial bridge across the Potomac river which connects the cities at Washington and which was also dedicated to Francis Scott Key. Upon entering the Georgetown end of this bridge is on the site of Key's old home in that city. While the bridge was under construction a tall stone in to mark the spot for the unveiling of the monument to the Francis Scott Key bridge. The Francis Scott Key bridge was given its name by the Congress of the United States which also authorized the memorial to be erected on Capitol Hill. Upon the pedestal there is this inscription: "Through the efforts of patriotic citizens, who believe that the nation should honor the American patriot, Francis Scott Key, descent of King George of England" (since corrected) "was named for the British monarch, the name of the bridge was changed and under its auspices there is a perpetual reminder of the possession of the author of our national anthem with the history of our National Capital.

Perhaps the most interesting of all the Key memorials is the one which was erected by President Harding in 1922 at Fort McHenry, near Baltimore, where someone the moment which took place in Francis Scott Key the author them. Tipped by the stalk, the creature is then placing a live which is said to be the largest single one known across is removing. This membrane is then constructed, bearing a barnacles' portion of Key surrounded by other animal life. Barnacles have been exerted by any recorded earthquake.

Substantial Building

Engineers estimate that the new Empire State building in New York, its 1,248 feet above the sidewalk, has withstand 4,320,000 pounds of pressure a square inch before that has been exerted by any recorded earthquake.

county, secured the Royal task by Admiral Cochrane. However, the admiral, and likewise General Ross, did not take kindly to the suggestion of pirates. Hence Beanes and General Ross were soberingly denounced bonnes to the situation.

Fortunately, Mr. Skinner had been prepared with letters from the wounded left in charge of Baltimore and even the latter friend, from receiving these, and to appeal to the colonies of the British army. Dr. Beanes was released and returned to Washington. He found him to the deserted post of the ship, arising the window and measure. He was constantly inspired with antipathy by those around him, and the same thunderbolts dropped within the confines of the British camp.

Key and Skinner were transferred to the frigate Surprise and released on that vessel until the fleet, consisting of some of the time boats Tonnage and bomb vessels, and 19 ships, reached the mouth of the Patapsco when they were transferred to their own vessels, with a guard of sailors and marines to prevent them from landing.

On the morning of September 12 the fleets sailed up the Patapsco and during the day and night to come within about two and a half miles of the fort. Key's vessel was stationed in a position from which he could see distinctly the flag of Fort McHenry, which was erected on a high flag pole in the center of the fort.

Then followed Key's historic visit which ended "by the dawn's early light" when he saw that our flag was still there" and his inspiration for the poem which made him forever famous. It is not commonly known perhaps that Key was also the author of another notable song. He was a Episcopalian, a worshiper for St. John's church in Georgetown and he wrote for the church hymns to be sung at the time of the communion, which was erected on a high flag pole in the center of the fort.

Key was a lawyer of high reputation in Georgetown and acted as a leading citizen of the community, as it was only natural perhaps that he should be appealed to to secure the release of five Washington lawyers of Upper Marlboro, Md., who had been arrested by the British general, as Ross termed to the British fleet in Chesapeake bay after the burning of Washington. It is better to his counsel, under date of September 24 [illegible] Key wrote: "I am going in this morning to Baltimore to procure a flag to fling from Fort McHenry. Dozens of Marylanders is taken prisoner by the enemy, who threaten to carry him off. Some of his friends have asked me to apply for a flag to go and try to release his friends. I hope to return in about 8 or 10 days, though it is uncertain, as I do not know what's to find the fleet."

Key little realized at the time that he was making a journey which would bring him immortality. On his way to Baltimore he met John S. Skinner, who was in charge of the exchange of prisoners, and, the consent of President Madison, having been obtained, together they proceeded to Chesapeake bay, aboard the Minden, under a flag of truce, in search of the British fleet.

He went as far as the mouth of the Patapsco, where he left in with the British, and was courteously received by Admiral Cochrane. However, the admiral, and likewise General Ross, did not take kindly to the suggestion of pirates. Hence Beanes and General Ross were soberingly denounced bonnes to the situation.

W. W. Boyle went to Marquette Saturday to attend the ordination of his cousin, Martin Melican, of Manistique.

John U. Gallagher of Green Bay, is here visiting relatives and friends.

Mr. Earl Miller was a visitor here for a few days last week.

Miss Margaret M. Gallagher is visiting in Manistique and Escanaba this week.

Miss Raymonde McDonald is at home for a visit.

Mother Evelyn and Sister Terezan, of Grand Rapids, after spending a few days here, returned to Grand Rapids Tuesday. They were accompanied on the return trip by Sister M. Leo, who has been quite ill for several weeks.

Mr. H. A. Cragg, and son Robert, spent a few days here last week.

Mr. H. W. Miller of Charlevoix is a business caller here this week.

The 8th grade pupils of St. James are proud to say they will all be "Crashes" when school opens again next fall.

Margaret Martin of Detroit, was at home for a few days' visit last week.

Miss Kay Duffy went to Boyne City Monday to attend the graduation of her cousin, Rosella Dunlop.

Mrs. H. E. Pichner has gone to Pontiac to visit her brother, P. H. Aiken.

Mr. Powers, of Chicago, is here to open up the home of the Christian Brothers, who are expected to be here by the 9th day.

Mrs. Garrett Cole, of Normal, on the 22nd of May, entertained a family and several friends at a six o'clock luncheon Saturday evening. They all claim to have enjoyed the usual good time

NEED MORE BOSTON TEA PARTIES

In a recent issue, the Saturday Evening Post ... oil a real public service to the people of ... United States in its straight-from-the-shoulder editorial criticizing the orgy of spending by members of legislative and tax disbursing bodies.

It pointed out that spending other people's money is a favorite pastime of politicians and ... at when they have cleaned out everything and everybody, they do not stop but simply hunt for new ways to jack up old taxes or to find new ... s to tax. The people have stopped their ... spending but the politicians are still on a tax disbursing spree.

"Ways and methods of spending and financing that would meet with the severest reprobation in the case of an individual, are considered perfectly sound procedure by the politicians," said the Post.

"Reckless and prodigal private and public spending have exactly the same finish.

"The public improvement-vote-buying legislator is worse for the country than fire and pestilence."

It is a majority of our public improvements — yachts, where the upkeep is worse than the first cost, the automobiles and the swarm of public servants who must be paid out of new taxes.

It cites England, Germany and Russia where ... realism and actual confiscation of property have caused tax loads and destruction of wealth which can and will wreck any government.

In conclusion, it says: "Our greatest need right now is fewer cocktail parties and more tea parties—of the Boston kind."

WORKING AGAINST ACCIDENTS

The loss of life caused by automobile accidents—32,500 in 1930—is well known. It is estimated that there are 35 non-fatal serious injuries due to automobiles, to each fatality.

According to Harvey Becker, Professor of Highway Engineering at North Carolina State College, specific measures for eliminating accidents can be directed along the following lines: Elimination of highway and railroad grade crossings; separation of grades for the most important highways as well as for streets; better highway design; further improvement in safety features of cars; more rigid control of pedestrian traffic; laying the responsibility upon the individual motorist.

The Massachusetts experiment with compulsory insurance has not been a success, according to Eliot Wadsworth, Chairman of the Committee on Insurance of the House of Representatives of that state. He says that "the compulsory law has failed in providing what is most essential, namely, a means to make drivers of automobiles more careful and considerate."

A financial responsibility law with a demerit rating similar to the law in force in Connecticut which provides for penalties in the form of $10, 25 and 50 per cent increases in the insurance rates for drivers who have accidents, and a 10 per cent reduction for a good record is being looked upon with more favor. Under such a law the person having an accident would have to pay his legal liability or be refused the right to drive.

A number of states have at different times considered the Massachusetts compulsory insurance idea but, profiting by its experience, have not taken the jump.

THE "BREAKING DOWN PROCESS"

Violation of the prohibition law is so flagrant in this country that "any book can see it," said George L. Baker, ex-mayor of Portland, Oregon, in New York City.

"Enforcement is the most trying work of municipal, state and federal authorities," Mayor Baker said, "because people who are ordinarily strong for general enforcement of all laws and are good Americans under ordinary conditions, violate the prohibition laws and contribute to the breaking down of other laws. They feel that their personal liberties are being restricted."

Our tendency to legislate on every phase of human liberty has augmented the "breaking down process" of respect for law by both young and old, rich and poor. Unnecessarily restrictive legislation always brings law violation, and continual law violation brings disrespect for law.

Proposals for anti-gun laws which deny a private citizen the right to own or possess small arms, are among the perennial samples of restrictive legislation that would make law-breakers out of otherwise law-abiding citizens.

This nation must curb its tendency to substitute law for character or we can look for more law-breaking instead of less.

PRORATION AND OIL PRICES

At the present time there is a certain amount of opposition to the proration plan of oil production on the ground that it has not maintained a stable price level for crude oil, and hence has failed of its purpose.

Proration is not, and should not, be a means for fixing prices. Its primary purpose, which benefits both the public and producers, is to secure for each person with an interest in an oil field, a ratable share of the market outlet for that field and state. This reduces operating costs with consequent savings to oil companies and purchasing public alike, and likewise does away with the waste that always results from uneconomic, unregulated competition in developing natural resources.

It is claimed that proration in no way interferes with the natural free play of supply and demand in the control of price. The best illustration of this is the tremendous decline in retail prices of gasoline occurring in many states in the last few months. One of the states where ... reductions have taken a decisive drop—California ... is likewise a state where proration is in effect in important pools.

Proration is an effort to give all producers equality in a field and keep production of oil from going far beyond the point of consumption. This amounts to a valuable public service —there is no room for waste of invaluable oil resources.

HOW TAXES ARE INCREASED

Muscle Shoals may be a time-worn topic to discuss but it is one of those political experiments that pile up the government overhead and create permanent, increased taxes for the people to pay. The more such experiments we have the higher taxes go.

At Muscle Shoals, according to Edwin Gruehl of the North American Company, the government spent more than $68,000,000 on two nitrate plants involving processes which are now obsolete. It spent $56,000,000 for the Wilson Dam which is capable of producing less than 100,000 horsepower under present conditions. To remedy this lack of capacity, it is now proposed to spend $83,000,000 more for dams and improvements, bringing the total investment to $207,000,000.

On the credit side of the Muscle Shoals ledger is an item of $2,600,000, the total receipts to the government from the sale of power between September, 1925, and June, 1929. Against this must be charged direct operating expense of $50,000. Thus the return to the government in four years was less than $2,000,000 on a direct investment of $56,000,000—less than one per cent per year.

"TWISTING"

The public is being warned that in certain parts of the country persons purporting to be "life insurance experts" are indulging in a systematic campaign of "twisting." In other words, such a person will approach a life insurance policyholder with a proposition that he drop a present policy and take in its place another form of contract in some other company, presumably for the sake of saving money.

Don't be misled by such alluring tales. No policyholder in any established legal reserve life insurance company can drop or exchange an existing legal reserve policy without loss to himself. The person who recommends such a change is doing it solely for personal profit.

If you are approached by such a "twister," you will be protecting yourself by communicating immediately with your company or the insurance commissioner of your state. "Twisting" is prohibited by law in many states because it is harmful to the interest of the policyholder.

TAXES STRANGLING INDUSTRY

According to Lee G. Lauck, economist, taxes are getting a stranglehold on our major industries. As an example, he cites that the total direct tax bill of the railroads in 1930 amounted to $2.90 for every man, woman, and child in the United States. Of every dollar paid for freight or passenger transportation, 6.5 cents went for taxes.

To meet their taxes the lines had to pay out their entire gross earnings for a period of more than three weeks. Stated differently, after paying their wage, fuel and operating expense bill, taxes consumed the earnings of the railroads for about 80 days out of the year. They paid more in taxes than they received for transporting wheat, corn, passenger automobiles, auto trucks and parts.

Our other great industries are in a similar position. At present, Mr. Lauck says, 50 cents out of every dollar of net corporate profits goes to the tax collector. On the average, taxes have increased 965 per cent—and railroad taxes 1245 per cent—in the past four decades, though our national wealth has increased only 454 per cent in that time and our population less than 100 per cent.

These taxes, of course, are passed directly on to the consumer, whether he buys groceries or railroad service. Every citizen must bear his share of the burden. It is no wonder that tax reduction is becoming one of the burning governmental issues of the day.

PLENTY OF MONEY

Six billion dollars was offered the United States Government when it put out the new issue of $800,000,000 Government bonds at three and one-eighth per cent. Evidently a lot of people who got their money out of the stock market and hid it away are anxious to get it in safe Government bonds. Students of economics who have been surprised at the amount of money found to be available for safe investments are trying to find some new way of coaxing these billions from those who hoard so much wealth

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

While the free traders have been declaring with ill-concealed satisfaction that the recent rise in the Canadian tariff is a blow at American industry and a retaliation for the Smoot-Hawley tariff bill enacted a year ago, it is rather significant that requests for higher duties in the United States have been sponsored recently, in part at least through statesmen connected with the Democratic party, some of whose leaders are now trying to recommit it to the free trade program.

The new Canadian tariff schedules need occasion no great surprise. The Conservative Party, now in power in Canada, has always been in favor of a protective tariff for exactly the same reasons that the protectionists give in the United States. The party believes that the best way to protect the Canadian farmer and business man, to say nothing of the Canadian workingman, is through a protective tariff. It is to be remembered too that Canadian tariffs were already paying a proportionately greater tariff than Americans, before these new rates were put into effect, which makes the argument about retaliation seem a little far fetched.

But to return to conditions in the United States. There is little doubt that the country has been benefited by the rates in the Smoot-Hawley tariff law. And now the copper producing interests have come forward seeking a tariff on Arizona copper, and have employed a distinguished political statesman of the state to plead their cause.

But there is another sign of the times even more significant in light of the recent free trade barrage which has deluged the country. John J. O'Mara, president of the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, appeared before the U. S. Tariff Commission, painting a picture of ruinous competition from shoes made abroad and asking for a higher tariff on shoes. Representative Connery, of Massachusetts, a Democratic statesman, in no uncertain terms backed up this plea for a higher tariff on shoes.

According to the American Labor Banner, President O'Mara painted an astonishing picture of the shoe industry in Czechoslovakia, where shoes, through low wage scales are produced at 28 cents per pair, labor cost, as against a labor cost of from 90 cents to $1.70 per pair for the same class of shoes in the United States. As the duty paid on the foreign shoes imported to America is but 40 cents per pair, it is easy to see how the foreign she will ever be asked to perform any service except nursing. As fay, then, as these two individuals are concerned, no danger to the republic would follow their admission to citizenship.

But such admission would open the door to all sorts of compromises, to various kinds of bargains. Some candidate might not like this law and demand the right to observe it or not as he saw fit; some other candidate might have stilla different reservation. What would we do in their cases? The oath of allegiance requires the applicant to swear that he will support and defend the Constitution and laws of the United States against all enemies foreign and domestic and bear true faith and allegiance to the same." Does this mean what it says, or doesn't it? The Court says that it does, and rules accordingly.

By this decision the Supreme Court has drawn a clearly visible line which will dispose of the many individual distinctions which are continually being raised by applicants for American citizenship. It is the inherent right of the government to demand certain qualifications of applicants; and in many cases the questions that are raised are by persons notoriously opposed to the system of national defense which the United States maintains as part of its traditions. It seemed incumbent upon the court to

Safety Glass

Ford cars are now equipped with safety glass in all doors and windows at a small extra charge

$15 for the Coupe, De Luxe Coupe, Sport Coupe or Convertible Cabriolet — $20 for the Tudor Sedan, Standard Sedan, De Luxe Sedan, Town Sedan or Victoria

THE Triplex safety glass windshield has always been an outstanding feature of the Model A Ford. By reducing the dangers of flying glass, it has saved many lives and prevented countless injuries in automobile collisions.

Now comes a further assurance of safety to every Ford owner ... polished plate safety glass in ALL DOORS AND WINDOWS at slight additional cost.

The charge for this extra protection is unusually low because of large production and the development of new methods of manufacture. Simply tell the dealer when you buy the Ford that you want "safety plate glass in all doors and windows" and the car will be factory-equipped for you in that manner.

Today, as before, the safety glass windshield is furnished as standard equipment on all Ford cars without extra charge.

FORD OWNERS This announcement refers only to NEW CARS. Ford dealers are not in a position to install safety glass in the windows of your present Ford at the above prices.

Stand of High Tribunal Eliminates Mental Reservations

The decision of the Supreme Court in the naturalization cases of Rev. Douglas Clyde McIntosh of Yale, and Miss Marie A. Bland, both Canadians, declaring that the courts can not permit applicants for its rights and privileges to take the oath of allegiance with mental reservations. The fact that both candidates are persons of exemplary character, with excellent records, Professor as a chaplain in the World War and the other a war nurse, somewhat shortens the issue before the court. John J. O'Mara, president of the Boot and Shoe Workers Union, appeared before the U. S. Representative Connery, of Massachusetts, a Democratic statesman, in no uncertain terms backed up this plea for a higher tariff on shoes.

A Quartette of Young Ladies of the High School Receive Their Diplomas Last Evening

It was a proud event for the Class of 1931 of the Charlevoix High School at Lewis' Grand Opera House last evening, and one to long be remembered by the school patrons and the school faculty. The house was filled to its utmost capacity, the stage was tastefully arranged and elaborately decorated with plants and flowers, the class motto, "Most Beyond" forming a portion of the back setting.

Misses Carreen Williams, Pearle Dartt, Margrie Green and Kate Smith, are the young ladies who, after their years of faithful application, have reached the highest standard attainable in their school. They bore their honors, and contributed to their portion of the exercises bravely, modestly and creditably. Miss Kirwin and Misses Winnie Bartholomew, Manit Sax, Artis Savage, Ethel Newman and Clara Amsler rendered vocal selections that were equally creditable.

The address of the occasion was delivered by Superintendent Cattino of Kalkaska. Prof. Cattino spoke eloquently and thoughtfully for a half hour. His address dealt with "The Beautiful", and his opening was devoted to a word picture of Charlevoix.

The large attendance evidenced the fact that Charlevoix is proud of her school and the marked success of the school year, so auspiciously celebrated, in it is hoped, only the beginning of still greater successes under the masterly guidance of Superintendent Rose.

The motto of the class of '31— "More Beyond"—is a good one for the school patrons and the school board to admit in the government of the school system, in its administrative and educational standards, should be issued.

The people in the streets and the men employed at Nichols' mill, together with several boats that were on Round Lake, joined in an effort to capture the animal. He swam to the north shore of the harbor where he was met by a crowd of about twenty men, who, by the aid of poles in hands, captured him and conveyed him in triumph to Nichols's farm. Mr. O. S. Washburn purchased him of the four persons who claimed the captured animal, and he will now be an approachable frame of mind.

O. J. Whaat and W. H. Carr, of St. Johns, have located in Charlevoix and will hereafter make it their home. They are carpenters and builders and already at work. These gentlemen are also talented musicians and will organize an orchestra with the intention of furnishing balls and theatres with first class music. They are thoroughbreds and have a very fine collection of superior orchestra music.

We sample respite from the cares of business last week and spent two days on an expedition to the Jordan river. With time, Hughes as guide, and a bottle of Creutzer's mosquito preventive, we floated up amid the magnificent scenery of the Jordan, to a point four miles from the mouth, and dropping gently down among the secluded trout nooks, now and then landing the gamy little speckled beauties, to the music of the industrious mosquitoes, we spent Wednesday afternoon reaching Melrose's in time for a hearty supper and a night's lodging with our friend, Mr. Monroe, in the morning we rambled up the road a mile to Deer Creek, and down the bank of the stream among the densely matted cedars arriving at Monroe's in time for dinner and an hour's rest. In the afternoon we launched our boat for another float down the quiet stream, arriving at the Jordan River House, weary, sunburned, but happy in the possession of barely trout enough for a good square meal, at a cost somewhere in the vicinity of a dollar per pound. They say it is pleasant and enjoyable for those who like this touring experience, but we demur. The only thing that now remains to remind us of the trip, is the unspeakable odor of mosquito quilt grease, with which our hide is saturated, and which we are vainly trying to eradicate, but there are pleasant remembrances among the memories of tribulation and the poignant grief of losing a pound and a half of trout, and gaining a darkening, is smallpox, and hospitality as we enjoyed at the hands of Mr. Monroe and his wife, and the comfort and treatment received at the Jordan River House. We shall go again, but trout will be the secondary consideration in the expedition.

THE COMING YEAR OF NINTEEN THIRTY-TWO

The activities of Republican and Democratic National Committee gives promise in Washington indications that the leaders in national politics are thinking very hard about the next presidential election. The question, "will Hoover be renominated" can be answered in only one way and that answer is in the affirmative for the simple reason that the Republicans want stand by their own administration, and if they can't win with Hoover no one they can't expect to win at all.

There is no doubt that a number of leading Democrats are willing to undertake the task of capturing the presidency next year. Ex-Governor Al Smith and Governor Roosevelt of New York are considered whenever the statesmakers get busy. There is a very strong trend in favor of Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War in the Wilson Cabinet. The Democrats are also looking with some favor upon Governor Ritchie of Maryland and Ex-Governor Byrd of Virginia. Either of these men, it is felt, would make the South safe for democracy. The answer to this is that the Democrats are more concerned about Northern and Western States than about the South and for that reason a candidate is likely to be picked who will appeal to the masses of voters in large States, including New York.

News Items Taken from The Sentinel of this date Thirty Forty, Fifty and Sixty Years Ago

THIRTY YEARS AGO

Manager Gilmore has decided to open the Inn July 1st. W. H. Terry, steward, arrived Monday.

There don't appear to be any flies visible on or about the person of Lide Shanahan, attorney, Charlevoix, Michigan. Mr Shanahan was complainant's attorney in the roster injunction case, and he had against him as counsel for the village, ex-Judge Pailthorp of Petoskey—a foeman worthy of his steel. Mr. Shanahan went into the fight with vim, down and around "dog a pat," of course he had the law on his side and he took it all into court in his "grass bag". A big counsel's feather is ornamenting Mr. Shanahan's hand-gun.

The construction of cement walks on Bridge street necessitates grading down the street where it has been. Therefore it has been ordered that the street committee cause a four and half to the required grade. The Chalmers and Burns walks are completed and the improvement will be extended along the Cloister front, and we presume the contagion will spread.

There has been some criticism in Charlevoix that the Charlevoix Milk Company for the proposed enlargement of their business in another state. As Charlevoix is an unincorporate town to be sure, but there is another side to the subject. Mr. Enos referring as they did to have to be bought the milk up to date, the profits on sales in Charlevoix have not been sufficient to pay for the insurance and help. They have been compelled to look elsewhere for trade, while Mineola for four by years has come to Charlevoix. This is the right, Charlevoix fund is as good as any other and should have the preference in Charlevoix business. We are authorized to state that the future of the Charlevoix Milk as a Charlevoix plant, depends entirely on the encouragement and patronage it gets from Charlevoix. Charlevoix can only sustain one manufacturing establishment, but it would be folly to deny what it already has, but there is room to go ahead of our people in the manufacturing line without any fear of its own enterprises. We know more about the matter than we care to print. The is a matter that calls for a revival of local patronism.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCH HOLDS THEIR ANNUAL MEETING

Seventy-Nine New Churches Formed During The Past Year

Boston—Seventy-nine new branches of the Christian Science Church were organized last year, it was announced at the annual outing of The Mother Church, held in Boston recently. Six thousand members from many parts of the world, including a large group from Michigan, attended the meeting. There are now 2,512 Christian Science Churches and societies, besides forty college and university organizations. Of the new churches organized this year, forty-five are in North America, and twenty-two in Europe. For the first time Poland has a branch church.

Robert E. Bulfum of Belmont, Massachusetts, prominent Boston attorney, was elected President of The Mother Church for the ensuing year.

It was announced that The Christian Science Journal now has a circulation of 124,000, and the Sentinel of 122,500. Periodicals are issued in six languages besides English, as well as in Braille type for the use of the blind. There are more than nine hundred employes in the Boston publishing house.

During the year the church gave funds for relief of hurricane sufferers in Santo Domingo, and for other relief activities in New Zealand, Java, China, Italy and Germany, besides extending aid to drought sufferers in the Mississippi Valley.

The growth of Christian Science is due, it was declared, primarily to its dependence directly upon spiritual healing in accord with its teachings," declared Duncan Sinclair, retiring President. "Practically," he added, "the progress of our movement is determined by the growth of the spiritual understanding of Christian Scientists throughout the world—by their growth in spirituality and their power to heal. In giving Christian Science to the world our beloved Leader, Mary Baker Eddy, has illumined the Word of God as contained in the sacred Scriptures, made practical the healing and works of the Wayshower, and demonstrated their availability and efficiency in solving all of the problems of the human race."

Among the speakers at the meeting was Mrs. Annie M. Knott, formerly of Detroit, who is a member of the Christian Science Board of Directors.

General's Good Reason for Leading His Men

The retirement of General MacArthur brought the famous World war commander once more into the spotlight. Floyd Gibbons recounts this characteristic anecdote concerning him.

"With Frazier Hunt and the late Lincoln Eyre, I had gone to visit MacArthur, then a brigadier general, but he was out. We waited awhile and presently he came in, not in showy uniform but in a black sweater. He had personally led his troops over the top against a line of machine guns. The sweater was creased with bullets.

"Say, General," commentated Eyre, "we can't afford to risk a good brigadier general out there doing the work of a second lieutenant. You're much too important." To which MacArthur replied:

"There are times in this war when the life of a brigadier general is not important. I want my men to know that I will never ask them to do anything I am not willing and glad to do myself."

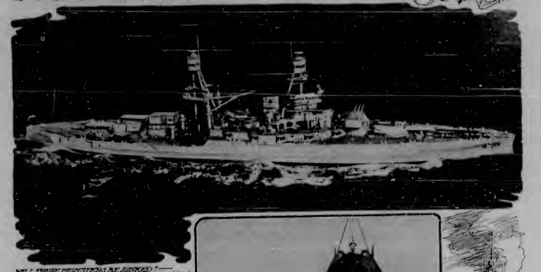
"Vest Pocket" Cruiser New Naval Threat



WILL THEIR DESCENDANTS BE FORCED TO LOOK FOR SUNKEN TREASURE?—International Photo

By JOHN D. GRANT

The naval powers of Europe are busily bolstered over Germany's latest addition to its navy, the "mystery" ship of "vest pocket" cruiser, Deutschland, recently launched at Kiel.

The cruiser, which has taken 30 months to build at a cost of $20,000,000, is admitted by French experts to be the most powerful small fighting ship ever built. There are many passionate experts in the French naval staff, who insist that ten for ten the Deutschland will greatly surpass the new 26,600-ton British battleship replacing Prince of Wales, launched at Kiel.

The new lightweight engines in the Deutschland, which have been brought down to weight to 24 pounds per horse power unit, have an equal in any other navy and the silhouette of the German warship lies in the fact that, fitted with such engines, it can outspeed any other ship in a long cruise. That makes it particularly dangerous as a raider along the commercial sea lanes of the world.

From among its special officers, Grand Admiral Raeder selected Captain Zenker to command the Deutschland and Zenker, who is a specialist in naval engineering, has personally supervised the building of the ship. Close to 20 anti-aircraft guns and especially the secondary armament with which Germany has armed the vessel is considered a powerful defense, which is of prime importance, for the Germans want the ship to defend their Fatherland, which was cut off from the motherland by the British corridor.

Whether the Deutschland will fulfill all expectations of the German naval constructors will be determined by time. Nevertheless, the "vest pocket" cruiser is a threat to all other warships and a source of deep concern to every naval power.

Under Article 181 of the peace treaty Germany's naval forces are limited to six battleships, six light cruisers, twelve destroyers, and twelve torpedo boats. These ships may, under Article 190, be replaced by "armored ships" not exceeding 10,000 tons each displacement or costing 6,000 tons, destroyers not exceeding 800 tons and torpedo boats not exceeding 200 tons. Her battleships are limited to 16,000 tons, displaced at the end of 20 years, the smallest craft at the end of 15. And as her present battleships are all more than 20 years old, she is free to carry out a replacement program.

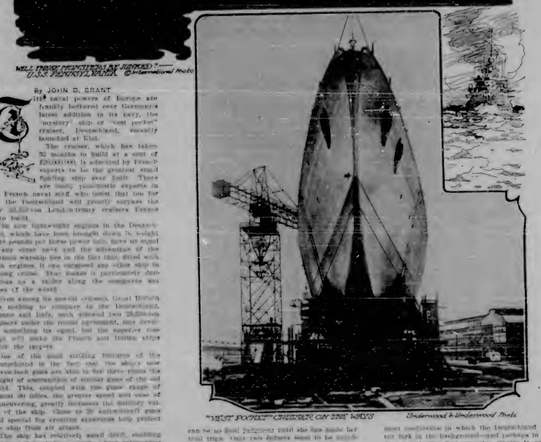
The possibilities within the narrow limits set by the treaty have been exploited with extreme skill and resourcefulness. The battleship has been overstepped in a boat's breadth, but although they were intended to prevent Germany from having a fleet that would be more than a North Sea coastal patrol, they remained in no formidable a type as to give Germany a naval preponderance over all the other Baltic powers combined, to influence the reconstruction programs of the great naval powers, and only hope to put into Germany's hands that weapon which she used with such terrible effect in the World war —the weapon of commerce raiding.

The new vessel is officially termed an "armored cruiser" (Panzerkreuzer), but she is really more like a battle cruiser than a cruiser in spite of her small size, which has earned for the the nickname of "pocket battleship." Her armament duplicates it, as the treaty prescribes, in the main. Her length, both and draught are still unrevealed, except that her draught is known to be shallow. She carries six 11-inch, eight 6-inch, four 3.4-inch guns and six 19.7-inch torpedo tubes. Her 11-inch guns are of Krupp manufacture, carry 567 pound projectiles weighing 650 pounds at a range of 20,000 yards at an elevation of 40 degrees. They have a powerful bursting gear which, so it is said, will enable them to fire four rounds a minute each.

Her underwater protection is said to be superior to anything hitherto known. She has a complete belt of armor and her protective decks. Her hull is electrically welded. She carries Diesel engines that are exceptionally light and powerful and weigh only 18 pounds per unit of horse power as compared with 150 per unit, which is the average for the lightest Diesel engines on motor ships. They have but a quarter of their bulk and give her a cruising radius of 10,000 miles at 20 knots. By superheating fuel she could, as it is contended, cruise 20,000 miles without refueling.

She is designed for a maximum speed of 28 knots, but it is anticipated that she will be able to exceed this figure. She is only the first of her class—the Ersatz Lothringen, Ersatz Braunschweig and Ersatz Elsass (also known as Panzerkreuzer B, C and D) are planned to follow. The first appropriations for the Ersatz Lothringen were voted by the reichstag this year.

It is, of course, possible that the ship will not completely fulfill what is expected of her. She is somewhat of an experiment and there can be no final judgment until she has made her trial trips. Their own defects seem to be anticipated in all possible details. Excessive vibration and a low freeboard which will, perhaps make her rather a wet sailer for rough seas are the first ones. If the ships have suffered in these respects, one of the most remarkable and tremendously expensive efforts in naval architecture has been for nothing. Germany has, however, one of the most experienced navies in the world and will not send out a poorly designed ship.



"VEST POCKET" CRUISER CAN SINK WARS

Germany's own security must be increased, then the price of humoring the rather problematic eagerness of disarmaments might—from the German point of view—be worth paying. But on the basis of Germany's security, the Deutschland has destroyed the Hitlerite pipe-war dreams. They will not count on the sea and will not even a potential enemy in naval warfare, now she is a potential enemy but also one that can, if necessary, be placed in a position of overpowered inferiority by the building programs and naval alliances directed against her.

It is true that the Deutschland can destroy any other cruiser afloat but she can be overtaken and run away from capital ships. But she cannot run away from airplanes. She is still more open to the menace of the air attack, for she lacks one of the main defenses, armored plates. She would therefore be under the constant menace of bombs by squadrons from aircraft carriers, bearing war after the style of enemy men and one torpedoes. Full of taking powder and nose with and drops by squadrons on a bolting chase, adopting the evasive form. Make from 35 to 45 minutes, depending upon the size of the pilot. Cool off with a sharp knife near the bottom of the puff, remove any dowdy corner and fill with the following:

Cut one-half a package of dates and one cupful of marshmallows with the scissors. Dip the scissors into water to keep the mallows from sticking. Chop two-half cupful of nutmeats and one cupful of cocoa beaten until stiff, and a pinch of salt and a flavoring of vanilla. This amount will make one dozen large puffs.

Irish Kisses.—To one-half cupful of peanut butter add one-half cupful of cocoa, three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar and two tablespoons of whole. Mix and beat until they are thoroughly blended. Drop by teaspoonfuls on buttered baking sheet and bake 15 minutes. This makes 18 kisses.

As the apples which have been kept in cold storage have lost some of their tenderness and flavor and a half cupful of granulated sugar to them when putting in stew, instead of water, the result will be a different and finer applesauce.

"Biting" Remarks Natural in Contest Over Teeth

"Your mouth is your teeth" was the remark said to be heard, not in Chicago, but in a little Hungarian village, and the doctor was the bone of contention.

It seems that the patient, who had sent his false teeth to the dentist for polishing had not paid a 30¢ which his mother had borrowed several years previously. The dentist had locked the false teeth and refused to return the man's teeth until he had paid his mother's debt in full.

The matchless man went on the ground of "indecisive abuse of professional rights." The dentist sneered countered with the statement that since he couldn't eat without money, he was entitled to the other man's teeth—and he imagine he had an easier time of it than the dentist.

The court made several pithy remarks which neither party to the suit relished.—Washington Post.

Pretty Indian Legend

The custom of sacrificing a beautiful maiden by sending her over Niagara falls in a canoe was practiced by the Indians before their visit to the New World. The maiden selected plotted a white canoe with pink trimmings and flowers for the falls. It was certainly a great honor to be chosen as the sacrificial victim, since the only drawback to it seemed that she accepted by the guiltiest person in the tribe. Her father loved her dearly, and he showed no sign of grief. The event happened during the whole day, and when night came and the moon was the girl paddled her canoe to wood the falls, amidst hints tossed and shouting hallelujah around while canoe darted from the opposite bank. It contained the chief's brother. The canoes met, and together they went to their death over the falls.

Wealth Awaits Salvage by Treasure Hunters

The value of the gold recovered remains about as during World War I, is estimated at six thousand million pounds, a sum calculated to set all the commercial adventurers on earth of mastery. The discovery of all this treasure is open to anybody who can provide the means and the enterprise. Even the property of neutrals, in war subjects, it is the accustomed proceeding for the authorities to hand over to the salvors. Not all will find it, but enough will find it to make the hunting either fun or pay.

Among the greatest wrecks that await the silver are those of Wilhelm der Zweiter wrecked off the coast of Africa, with 2,700 bars of silver for Pretoria in the bag of Tobermory, with bullion valued at £1,000,000, the Linford, same boat Cornwall, with a cargo of gold valued at £1,000,000, the Tubantia, sunk with £2,000,000, the Hermione, with £2,000,000 of copper off the coast of Africa, the San Pedro, in Margarita channel, off tropical America, with a cargo of pearls, jewels and silver, the Laurentic, which has already yielded £3,000,000 in gold, and the Lusitania, with £1,000,000—Detroit Free Press.

New Uses for Mercury World's Pressing Need

There is a great fascination for anyone who will think so some new uses for mercury. During the World war the production of mercury was speeded up to the limit and at that time was used in many ways to meet demands. Since that time mercury has been secured and has experimented until there is a storage of almost nine new uses soon to be found for it. It is stated that the surplus amounts to 5,000 flasks a year, and that the flask contains about 75 pounds, this means a total of about 375,000 a year extracted from ores amounting to 250,000 tons being refined in the French bureau of the Spanish government. Some new uses for mercury, but the idlers subsidized must be sure.

World War Money

Many curious experiments were resorted to during the World war in order to prevent people of hoarding the metals from resorting to non-circulating terror. The lower metals were used instead of those in gold and silver, often being gilded in order to carry out better the illusion of value. Printed wood was employed in Germany and Austria, also compressed paper. Still, there was not very much money saved that way, and the use of wood was discontinued as economy.

For small change, shoe nails were sometimes used as makeshift money, and in Russia, at one time, pieces of iron bent into a horse shape were current.

Wealth Awaits Salvage by Treasure Hunters

The value of the gold recovered remains about as during World War I, is estimated at six thousand million pounds, a sum calculated to set all the commercial adventurers on earth of mastery. The discovery of all this treasure is open to anybody who can provide the means and the enterprise. Even the property of neutrals, in war subjects, it is the accustomed proceeding for the authorities to hand over to the salvors. Not all will find it, but enough will find it to make the hunting either fun or pay.

Among the greatest wrecks that await the silver are those of Wilhelm der Zweiter wrecked off the coast of Africa, with 2,700 bars of silver for Pretoria in the bag of Tobermory, with bullion valued at £1,000,000, the Linford, same boat Cornwall, with a cargo of gold valued at £1,000,000, the Tubantia, sunk with £2,000,000, the Hermione, with £2,000,000 of copper off the coast of Africa, the San Pedro, in Margarita channel, off tropical America, with a cargo of pearls, jewels and silver, the Laurentic, which has already yielded £3,000,000 in gold, and the Lusitania, with £1,000,000—Detroit Free Press.

Achievement Is Easiest in Field of Education

Among all the callings and professions in which a man may choose, only in letters the shortest and easiest road to success. Even in the field of science he must go according to conventions made from a study of "What Will" by Perfitt Fissler.

"My purpose was to find an index to the opportunities for rapid commercial success starting in different kinds of work," he explains in Century Path to It. "Therefore I tabulated the experiences of people that elapsed between graduation and fortunes in Who's Who, for the various recognized occupational classes of the nation. Mrs and best and only they are thoroughly blended. Drop by tablespoonfuls on buttered baking sheet and bake 15 minutes. This makes 18 kisses.

"Biting" Remarks Natural in Contest Over Teeth

"Your mouth is your teeth" was the remark said to be heard, not in Chicago, but in a little Hungarian village, and the doctor was the bone of contention.

It seems that the patient, who had sent his false teeth to the dentist for polishing had not paid a 30¢ which his mother had borrowed several years previously. The dentist had locked the false teeth and refused to return the man's teeth until he had paid his mother's debt in full.

The matchless man went on the ground of "indecisive abuse of professional rights." The dentist sneered countered with the statement that since he couldn't eat without money, he was entitled to the other man's teeth—and he imagine he had an easier time of it than the dentist.

The court made several pithy remarks which neither party to the suit relished.—Washington Post.

Pretty Indian Legend

The custom of sacrificing a beautiful maiden by sending her over Niagara falls in a canoe was practiced by the Indians before their visit to the New World. The maiden selected plotted a white canoe with pink trimmings and flowers for the falls. It was certainly a great honor to be chosen as the sacrificial victim, since the only drawback to it seemed that she accepted by the guiltiest person in the tribe. Her father loved her dearly, and he showed no sign of grief. The event happened during the whole day, and when night came and the moon was the girl paddled her canoe to wood the falls, amidst hints tossed and shouting hallelujah around while canoe darted from the opposite bank. It contained the chief's brother. The canoes met, and together they went to their death over the falls.

Anglicized Term

The word "Dutch" is an English form of "Deutsch" and related words of the Germanic tongues. Formerly it applied to all people of Germanic stock or language but never except in America it now or has in Holland. The "Pennsylvania Dutch" who play an important part in the life and history of that state, and of the nation, are almost entirely of German and German Swiss descent.

North Pole Shifting

Now we can explain why in 1541 the North pole was in a different way. For the North pole is instantly moving—and the Arctic north of North America. A tradition famed by the Naskapi Indians, who assert that this theoretical top of the world is coming our way as we note it seven inches a year. While the cause of the shifting is unknown, W. H. Ear-Shaped Violin Shows

Resembling a human ear, a violin invented by a German scientist was shown in Germany recently. It is said to produce sounds of great sweetness and purity. As the accompanying picture shows, the instrument is vertical to the bow. It was not necessary to screw them to make room for it. This apparently has increased the resonance of the instrument.

"God the Discerver of Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all churches of this denomination Sunday, June 14.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "He said unto them, Give place for the maid is not dead, but sleepeth. And they laughed him to scorn. But when the people were put forth, he went in, and took her by the hand, and the maid arose" (Matt. 9:24, 25.)

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Sin, sickness, and death must disappear to give place to the facts which belong to immortal man. Learn this, O mortal, that sickness is the mortal illusion of man, which is outside of all material selfhood" (p. 476).

THOMAS ARKLE CLARK

"Guide . . . Philosopher and Friend"

That is what Dean Thomas Arkle Clark has been to thousands of university students. And the same characteristics which have endeared him to them are reflected in his inspirational essays which appear regularly in this newspaper. You'll enjoy reading them . . . and so will your friends. Tell them about these articles!

"Guide, philosopher and friend"—that is what Thomas Arkle Clark has been for more than a quarter of a century to the thousands of young men who have attended the University of Illinois. For "Tommy Arkle," as he is affectionately known to the students at that institution, has been dean of men there since 1909, and it is doubtful if any other educator in America has a wider acquaintance among the alumni of an institution of higher learning and the parents of its students than has Dean Clark.

And the same qualities—the kindly friendliness, the stern originality and the deep understanding of human nature—that have endeared him to so many thousands of university students, who have come under his influence, have also endeared him to the readers of his essays, which are published regularly in this newspaper.

Dean Clark was graduated from Wabash College in Indiana in 1894, and for two years after that was professor of English composition and the following three years literature at Wabash. He was then appointed Assistant Professor of English Authors, "The Sunday Right Orthodox", "The Fraternity and the College," "The Fraternity and the Undergraduate," "The High School Boy and His Problems," "Discipline and the Devil-Dog," and "When You Write a Letter."

In his essays, which are surprisingly in their scholarship, he finds a wealth of practical advice, of good "common sense," in dealing with our everyday problems, and we believe that our readers will not only enjoy reading Dean Clark's articles, but that they will want to tell their friends about them so that they may enjoy them, too.

ORDINANCE NO 161

An ordinance to regulate the milk supply of the city of Charlevoix; to prescribe penalties for violations of this ordinance; and to repeal certain ordinances and parts of ordinances relating to the milk supply of the city of Charlevoix.

THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX ORDAINS:

Section 1. That for the purposes of this ordinance:

(a) "Raw Milk or Cream" is milk or cream in its natural state and which has not been treated by sterilization or by the destruction of bacteria contained therein.

(b) "Pasteurized Milk or Cream" is milk or cream every particle of which has been subjected to a temperature of more than one hundred forty-two degrees Fahrenheit for not less than thirty minutes or for which it is promptly cooled to fifty degrees Fahrenheit or lower.

(c) "Grade A Milk" is milk produced from a farm accepted by the City of Charlevoix, or its Board of Health and produced in accordance with the provisions of section next of Act No. 167, revised by the Public Acts of 1929 of the State of Michigan and amendments thereto, and in accordance with any regulations made by the Board of Health of the City of Charlevoix in pursuance of said Act.

(d) "Certified Milk" is milk produced in accordance with the provisions contained in Act No. 248 of the Public Acts of 1911 of the State of Michigan and any amendments thereto in effect at the time of production.

(e) The words "milk" and "cream" when used unmodified in this ordinance shall be deemed to include both milk and cream in their raw and pasteurized states.

(f) A "milk plant shall be deemed to be any place where milk is collected, treated or prepared for sale or distribution (delivery and the) sale.

(g) The word "person" shall mean and include any individual, partnership, corporation, society or association.

Section 2. No person shall engage in the production, delivery, distribution or sale of milk for consumption in the City of Charlevoix without first obtaining a license therefor as provided by this ordinance except that persons engaged in the production of milk for, or delivery of milk to, a licensed milk plant only shall not be required to secure a license under this ordinance.

Section 3. Every person required to obtain a license by this ordinance shall first secure a permit from the Health Officer or his representative and shall pay therefor to the City Clerk the following fees:

(a) For maintaining a milk plant the sum of $2.00.

(b) For maintaining a farm on which Grade A milk is produced the sum of $1.00.

(c) Engaging in the sale or distribution of milk within the City of Charlevoix, the sum of $1.00 for each wagon, truck or vehicle used in such business.

The City Clerk shall issue a license as herein provided to any person presenting the foregoing permit and paying the fees herein provided, which license, when issued under this ordinance, shall not be transferable.

Section 4. Every license issued under this ordinance shall expire June 1st annually following the date of issue unless sooner revoked as herein provided. Licenses issued after December 1st shall be issued upon the payment of one-half of the annual fee.

Section 5. No person shall sell, deliver or convey into the City of Charlevoix for sale, distribution or delivery:

(a) Milk or cream to which water or any foreign substance has been added;

(b) Milk or cream kept at a temperature above sixty degrees Fahrenheit;

(c) Raw milk for direct consumption other than Certified milk and Grade A Milk as defined in this ordinance;

(d) Cream containing less than eighteen per cent butter fat or skimming cream containing less than thirty per cent butter fat.

(e) Milk or cream produced from diseased cows or from cows during the period of fifteen days preceding parturition or for such time thereafter as the milk is abnormal.

(f) Milk containing less than three per cent butter fat or less than eight and one-half per cent solids not fat;

(g) Milk or cream which has been produced, stored, handled or distributed in any unclean or unsanitary manner, or has been ordered rejected by the City of Charlevoix by the Health officer or his representative;

(h) Milk or cream placed in bottles which have not been properly washed and sterilized with steam;

(i) Milk or cream the bacteria count of which, at the time of delivery to the consumer, exceeds 50,000 per cubic centimeter as shown by the standard method of milk analysis published by the American Public Health Association and the Associa

PEE-WEE GOLF OPEN JULY 1ST

JULY FIRST IS DATE, UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT

The Pee Wee Golf Course operated in 1930 by Mr. Clark, has been purchased by Fred Angell formerly of Albee, Mich., and Bob Krafick of Charlevoix, who will manage and operate the course in the future under the firm name of Angell and Krafick.

The course was opened for the first time last season and was a without doubt, the best patronized Pee Wee course in this entire northern territory, as well as the best paying of any of the courses of like type in the region even though it was established as an experiment.

The new owners will make an effort to maintain the standard established last season and by courteous treatment hope to surpass the record made by the former owner.

Special lights will be installed for night players and other new improvements added that will be attractive to patrons of the course which will be opened to the public July first.

RUTH CHATTERTON INSPIRES AUTHOR TO DRAMATIC HIT

Crean's Emotional Star Displays Versatility in Lead of Play

"Unfaithful," written by the popular playwright, John van Druten, starring Ruth Chatterton, comes to the Palace Theatre for two days starting next Wednesday. This amazing story of a woman forced to choose between love and reputation, takes every advantage of Chatterton's blazing genius to put across an emotional shock-punch such as even Chatterton has seldom equalled.

"Unfaithful," the story, was written especially for Chatterton by John van Druten, the English playwright whose "Young Woodley" won fame and a first prize on the New York stage. Into the story, Van Druten has injected an action series of climaxes worthy of Chatterton's power.

As the centerpiece of a brilliantly acted supporting cast, Miss Chatterton is seen in a glamorous setting, in gorgeous clothes, in scenes usually to love with the hero-husband fate has given her, assured in her position. All the more appreciated is the transformation of the same Chatterton when she is beautiful heroine. Disillusioned in love, with her back smashed, she is helpless to free herself of the fetters of marriage which has become intolerable.

Then as the scandal-blaring and reckless woman of the world, Chatterton truly reveals her unequaled power of portrayal. Rash living, fool Lord Arden, who accepts her favors as the heights and depths of a thrilling society. At the heights she meets Paul Lukas to give her a new faith and add a new meaning to her life. But they, together, work out her salvation in the absorbing story "Unfaithful" reveals.

"Unfaithful" is the third Chatterton starring vehicle in which Lukas has played the leading male role. He was seen in "Anybody's Woman" and "The Right to Love" as advantageously and played his difficult roles with such skill that a popular demand gave him this third opportunity to play with Chatterton. John Cromwell, who has been making a series of smashing hits, "Streets of Chance", "For the Defense," "Scandal Sheet", during the past year, directed Chatterton for the first time in "Unfaithful." The brilliant star and virile director have made a picture of sustained power.

In addition to Chatterton and Lukas, the cast includes Paul Cavanagh, soon as the erring husband, who played important roles in such pictures as "The Devil to Pay," "Grumpy," "The Storm" and "The Virtuous Sin."

Talking to Yourself at Twenty

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"What would you give," a friend says, "if you could talk to yourself at twenty?"

It is an interesting thought, for to some other times it is thirty or forty years or so. Perhaps with the world, after having had a hundred years of experience, would be willing to give yourself advice at twenty, to point out shoals to be avoided, rocks to be steered clear of, opportunities to be grasped, chances for improvement and advancement which might have been taken. I have been sitting here thinking if all over about the question came to me, but there is a strong appeal in the thought. I'd surely like very much to do it. I should prefer, however, to sit down and talk things over with myself at fifteen rather than at twenty. At fifteen the imagination is awake, emotions are keenest, there is an easy sense of life. What would I say to myself at fifteen if I had the chance?

I thought over this for some of my leisure when I was sixteen. I should give myself a straightforward, workmanlike talk on taking care of the teeth and the hair because a sense of beauty and the fact that we are so necessary to good health or to good looks, and it would be an easy thing to form. If set because it's easily done. I should tell myself to be honest in all things, and to be as much as possible a gentleman. I should tell myself to be a "square shooter" and to play the game fair. I would tell myself to be courteous to my self, to be kind to myself, to be considerate of myself, to be generous with myself, to be loyal to myself, to be true to myself. I would tell myself to be clean in my habits, in my thoughts, in my speech, in my relations with others. I would tell myself to be a man among men, to be a friend to myself and to others. I would tell myself to be a student, to be a hard worker, to be a good sport, to be a booster for my school, my city, my state, my country, my flag. I would tell myself to be a booster for the right, for the true, for the beautiful, for the good. I would tell myself to be a booster for the best in life, for the best in others, for the best in myself. I would tell myself to be a booster for the best in myself, for the best in others, for the best in life, for the right, for the true, for the beautiful, for the good

UPHOLD COURAGEOUS EDITORS

For many years Wisconsin has been known as a "Progressive" state, politically. Just what "Progressive" means is largely a matter of opinion.

An incident occurred in the "Progressive" 1931 Wisconsin Legislature, which amuses public interest in the freedom of the press and personal rights and liberties.

John H. Chapple, managing editor of the Ashland, Wisconsin, Daily Press, criticized "Progressive" legislation for what he considered its attempt to prohibit opposition by private interests of Wisconsin to the program of state ownership of industry which the Legislature favored.

In an address before the Ashland Rotary Club and in reports from the Ashland Tidings in copyright booklet form, he shows what Wisconsin legislators and legislative committees said to gag opposition to politics, attacks on private property, in his opinion. As a result Mr. Chapple was requested to appear before the assembly judiciary committee to explain his editorial criticism of their program and his comment on certain individual members.

His report of the questions asked him and the determined fight made to deny him an opportunity to make his own statement in connection, reminds one of any rule of the most despicable character.

A Wisconsin political row is of no particular interest to the balance of the United States except as it displays policies which encroach upon fundamental American rights. Citizens in every state resent political attempts to cuch or intimidate an editor for his comment about public officials or legislative bodies.

The greatest danger this nation faces today is the growing power of officialism. If gag rule of editorial comment was attempted in Wisconsin, as claimed by Editor Chapple, it should be criticized by every editor, regardless of his politics. The absolute freedom of the press is the greatest safeguard this nation has against arrogant officialism which can, if permitted to unrestrictedly expand its powers, crush personal liberty and individual initiative and enterprise in this nation.

Legislative and public servants should be rebuked when necessary and tax-spenders should be held more strictly accountable to the taxpayers for their official acts in digging into the public treasuries in their endeavors to force states into business in competition with private citizens and taxpayers.

Editor Chapple is to be commended and should be upheld for his courage in expressing his objections to a political system in which he does not believe, in the face of the powerful opposition of the party in power. The people need this kind of courage to protect American traditions and ideals.

TIME FOR EFFICIENCY IN GOVERNMENT

When a private business has a deficit, it begins to cast around for ways and means to increase its earning power or decrease its overhead.

Now that our Federal government is facing a gigantic deficit, many of our lawmakers are chiefly concerned with how to "increase" taxes.

Tax gatherers — ask the simple fact that in times of distress — more taxes that are taken from the people, the less money there is for productive enterprise. And it is from productive enterprise that all taxes and employment must eventually come.

Industries and individuals have been readjusting themselves to present conditions. Let tax-levying bodies follow the same course or admit to the people that they are incompetent to adjust government expenditures to government income.

THE COMMUNITY TAX QUESTION

Oakland, California, for the past decade has been exerting itself to encourage the development of industries within its borders. Like all sections of the country, this city has been struggling with a constantly increasing load of taxation.

Recognizing the seriousness of the present tax situation under which large cities have drawn heavily on their taxpayers' resources to make costly municipal improvements, the Oakland Post-Inquirer, in a feature editorial, says:

"Lower taxes will mean higher local prosperity.

"The people of this community are struggling under a tax burden much too heavy.

"This high tax load has reached a point where it threatens to handicap the development of the community. It is certainly a handicap to individual bank accounts.

"To decrease taxes would be a sure way to increase business, to stimulate building operations, to relieve unemployment.

"Lower taxes is the most important question now confronting this community.

"Excessively high tax rates do mean in the end lower total income from taxes. They depreciate property values, they discourage new building, they frighten home owners, business men and industries away from a community. They cut down the amount and value of the property that can be taxed.

"Private business is finding ways to lower costs, fixed and otherwise, without lower efficiency, and in the end that may be the degree sion's great blessing in disguise for private business. Perhaps the same thing will be true of public business."

The Post-Inquirer has summed up a situation that confronts every community. What every city, county and state needs is a smaller total tax collection from every taxpayer, not new methods of getting more taxes. Let increased tax funds come from increased business and not more taxes from less business.

ARE YOU A LAW BREAKER?

No other great country has so many laws as the United States. No other great country has so much law breaking, it is said. This is not, of course, a coincidence. It is gradually being realized that too many laws are as detrimental as too few laws.

There is no point in chiding the public for countenancing lawlessness. The blame must go largely to those who have aided and abetted the mania for passing "more restrictive laws."

If all the antiquated traffic laws, 10-15-20 and 30 miles an hour speed limits, prohibition laws, anti-gun laws, "spitting" ordinances, anti-noise ordinances, etc., were enforced, probably 25 per cent of all citizens would be subject to fine or imprisonment everyday. We pass so many laws that it is impossible to enforce them because we couldn't provide enough courts and jails to handle the minor cases.

CUSTOMERS PROFIT

"If every industry had been able to do what the electric industry has accomplished during the last ten years, it is reasonable to suppose that business would not be in its present state of inactivity," says the Hartford Courant. "The policy of this industry has been to reduce its costs in every way possible and to make electric current not only cheaper, but more available to the last man. The result has been, the country over, an increase of 70 per cent in the amount of electricity used by the average household, with that item figuring only one per cent of the total family budget.

"Although the cost of living is about 57 per cent above what it was in 1913, domestic electric service is 69 per cent below its average price in that year. The average revenue to the companies on a kilowatt-hour basis is the lowest in history.

"In 1920 the average customer consumed less than 250 kilowatt-hours a year. Today he consumes more than 600. Within this decade manufacturers have been revamped to enable the consumer to use all manner of household appliances at a decreased cost. The completely electrified home has now been brought within the means of a numerous class, while the small consumer is constantly encouraged by lower rates to extend his use of electricity. We have, therefore, in the electric industry throughout the United States, a conspicuous example of profits through lower costs and extension of service, in all of which scientific research has played a notable part."

MAKE WATERWAYS SELF-SUPPORTING

There has been a tendency to treat waterways as "fashionable, official, and . . . sacred without investigation," said Samuel B. Botsford of the Buffalo, New York, Chamber of Commerce. The earning or service record of the inland waterways in general would make a poor showing compared to capital invested and the cost of operation.

Every waterway should be regarded purely as a transportation agency. Its cost and probable service should be investigated by experts, not by politicians seeking to please their constituents. Survey after survey, by unprejudiced authorities, has demonstrated that, in the vast number of instances, rail transportation is far more satisfactory and economical than inland water transportation. There are undoubtedly waterways whose development is economically wise—but that is no excuse for spending public money on any and all such projects to furnish a special service to a limited number of people to the destruction of our railroad systems upon which the whole nation must rely as its primary means of transportation.

REAL FOOD FOR REAL MEN

Major General Malin Craig is probably doing more to revive the dairy industry than all the political cure-alls ever proposed. In making an inspection of a Vancouver, Washington, barracks company kitchen, the second question he asked was:

"Do you serve milk as a regular ration?

When told, "No, sir," he replied, "That's too bad. You should do it for it's a wonderful food and the men like it."

In the next company kitchen, after the preliminary questions, he said,

"Do you serve milk for meals?"

"Yes, sir, for breakfast, sir."

"Enough so each man can have a glassful?"

"Yes, sir, a second if he wants it, sir."

"Say, that is fine. Milk is the best food soldiers can have. Any kicking on the meals, Sergeant?"

"Yes, sir, a little bit, but it doesn't amount to much, sir."

"That's fine. If there isn't any kicking, look out because there will be something seriously wrong with the men."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litchert

We are all familiar with the old free-trade slogan, that "if we are to sell abroad, we must buy abroad." The inference of course is that the protective tariff keeps us from buying abroad, merely because it exports less in sum of production at home and abroad in competitive articles, and gives the American worker an even chance with the ill-paid labor of the Orient. Nothing, of course, could be farther from the truth than this inference. Because of the protective tariff, Uncle Sam does not run behind an unsalable well producing everything at home that he consumes.

On the other hand, as the president of the Brooklyn Service put it the other day, Uncle Sam is the world's best customer. His economist calls attention to the fact that we consume three-fourths of the world's raw silk, two-thirds of its crude rubber and half of its tin. Under the free trade regime of the United States since three times as much silk as the rest of the world put together, twice as much tin as the other nations of the globe. Then we consume more coffee than any other nation, and great quantities of tea, sugar, tropical fruits and other commodities not grown in this country. And yet the free traders have the nerve to shout that the protective tariff is wrong because "if we are to sell abroad we must buy abroad."

Our protective tariff does not prevent our buying three times as much raw silk as the rest of the world put together, and twice as much rubber, as much tin, coffee and so on down the line. To the contrary, it is this protective policy which enables us to do these things and to remain, as a nation, the world's best customer. The proof of this statement is easy to find, our protective tariff laws provide only those commodities in production of which, even into competition with cheap labor lands abroad, can maintain through protection, a higher standard of living than the rest of the world, and thus enabled our workers to own automobiles, radios, electric refrigerators, have enough left them to use as much coffee and tea as they desire and have made it possible for their wives, sisters and daughters, in normal times to wear silk dresses and silk hose. It is because our workers and their families are such good earners and such good spenders that we have a surplus to sell abroad in competitive articles, and give the American worker an even chance with the ill-paid labor of the Orient. Nothing, of course, could be farther from the truth than this inference. Because of the protective tariff, Uncle Sam does not run behind an unsalable well producing everything at home that he consumes.

To sum up, it is a simple sequence of conditions: our protective tariff gives us the highest living standard and the greatest consuming demand in the world, and the ability to buy the products of the world, like silk, sugar, rubber, tea, coffee, and so on in much greater quantities than any other nation on earth, and it so enables Uncle Sam to become the best customer of the rest of the world. The theory of the free trader, therefore, of the necessity of a protective tariff wage to free trading abroad, and so selling abroad, is not only illogical but actually silly.

The less we worry about foreign markets and turn our attention to building up the great home market and restoring our national business to normal, the better off we will be, and the better off the rest of the world will be, that foreign trade, with the usual assistance given it by our government agencies, will then take care of itself.

WE MUST WORK OURSELVES OUT

No truer words have been spoken than those of President Hoover: "We cannot legislate ourselves out of a worldwide economic depression," he told newspaper men at a press conference. "We can and will work ourselves out."

We have tried many times to regulate economics by laws and never have succeeded. Sometimes laws have had some effect but finally we have had to depend upon such things as supply and demand, and business cooperation and leadership to achieve lasting results.

Too many people say, "There ought to be a law on it," every time something goes drong. The truth is, of course, we have untold thousands of laws that were better off the statute books.

And as the President says, "we can and will work ourselves out" of the slump. This the people of the United States have done many times. There have been worse depressions than the one we have been going through and always they have been followed by a period of abounding prosperity. We shall pass through this cycle and into another and prosperous one, but calling the Congress into special session to make new laws will not help. Rather, almost surely, it would hinder by creating a feeling of uncertainty and distrust on the part of business.

WHAT IS ELEGANCE?

Ten years ago it was customary to speak of the well-dressed woman as "chic". Five years ago the proper word to use was "smart." At the present moment the most-used expression is "becoming." Evidently there are fashions in words as well as clothes.

Looking into the future, Ethel Holland Little, well known fashion writer, predicts that the next word to be used for characterizing the smart woman will be "elegant." That word, she says, sums up what will be required of the American woman five years hence.

Elegance, Mrs. Little explains, does not mean frippery. Rather it expresses a superlatively smart simplicity. It has to do with well-constructed lines in clothes and carriage, with beautiful materials, with subtly blended colors, with all those basic excellencies that make extra decorations seem absurd. It has to do also with extreme care in the whole effect of raiment—the right hat with the right dress at the right moment, the refinement of matching glove and shoe, the perfection of hose, figure and disposition as well as dress.

American women of the future are going to be more handsome than ever before, Mrs. Little predicts. They are improving every year, she says, because, annually, she takes occasion to put the new vogue for pajamas in its proper place. "Japanese servants seem to replace the old-fashioned evening dress," she says. "They are not the riding about like equerries, nor for restaurants or on the theatre, but only for small affairs at home. They really a question of taste, of figure and activities. If a woman goes about with a younger set of friends, and she is energetic in thought and action, then she should dress to suit her background, or her group of friends. Women is well-proportioned, if she has distinction and if she never tries to imitate a glamorous type unlike herself, then let her wear them. Age doesn't matter."

"ANNOYING" ALIENS

Michigan has passed an alien registration law. In connection with the exchange protests against a similar law of this kind, and says:

"The amount of persecution and annoyance that could be caused by millions of law-abiding aliens by a nation-wide registration law is not a pleasant thing to think about."

Just why aliens who decline to become citizens of the United States should be entitled to the protection of foreign power are entitled to more consideration than American citizens, by birth or naturalization, has not been fully explained by those who protest against a nation-wide registration which would enable the federal government to determine whether an alien has long sojourned in the U. S. American citizen must register his automobile, his dog—and himself in most localities if he wishes a voice—and in the case of the dog or automobile he must pay the state a fee.

If an American citizen stays two weeks in England he must register with the police, and he must notify the police every time he changes his residence. In France Germany and many other European countries he must register with the police. In New York, Chamber of Commerce. The earning or service record of the inland waterways in general would make a poor showing compared to capital invested and the cost of operation.

Every waterway should be regarded purely as a transportation agency. Its cost and probable service should be investigated by experts, not by politicians seeking to please their constituents. Survey after survey, by unprejudiced authorities, has demonstrated that, in the vast number of instances, rail transportation is far more satisfactory and economical than inland water transportation. There are undoubtedly waterways whose development is economically wise—but that is no excuse for spending public money on any and all such projects to furnish a special service to a limited number of people to the destruction of our railroad systems upon which the whole nation must rely as its primary means of transportation.

REAL FOOD FOR REAL MEN

Major General Malin Craig is probably doing more to revive the dairy industry than all the political cure-alls ever proposed. In making an inspection of a Vancouver, Washington, barracks company kitchen, the second question he asked was:

"Do you serve milk as a regular ration?

When told, "No, sir," he replied, "That's too bad. You should do it for it's a wonderful food and the men like it."

In the next company kitchen, after the preliminary questions, he said,

"Do you serve milk for meals?"

"Yes, sir, for breakfast, sir."

"Enough so each man can have a glassful?"

"Yes, sir, a second if he wants it, sir."

"Say, that is fine. Milk is the best food soldiers can have. Any kicking on the meals, Sergeant?"

"Yes, sir, a little bit, but it doesn't amount to much, sir."

"That's fine. If there isn't any kicking, look out because there will be something seriously wrong with the men."

commercial power can not be understood unless this heavy drain upon industry is taken into consideration. The chief causes of unemployment in this country were found to be the decline in export trade, the substitution of oil and water power for coal, and revolutionary developments in the textile industry. British industry came into sharp competition with foreign enterprises. Methods and machinery were found in this country, as in other countries, to be inefficient. Under ordinary conditions industry would have responded to changing conditions, but British plants were under pressure as a result of the dole. Modernization was postponed and additional funds poured into the unemployment insurance fund. Even those industries which were prosperous and had no unemployment to speak of were taxed heavily to maintain idle men thrown out of obsolete plants in some other industry. The result was to hang a stone around the neck of British industry preventing its recovery of its ground. As this burden becomes heavier the drain upon industry increases and the more hopeless the economic system is weakened. The dole tends to postpone the necessary readjustments and thereby handicaps both industry and labor.—Washington Post.

PACIFISM AND PIFFLE

American advocates of the League of Nations—there are still a few—will be encouraged by a recent statement by Gen. Douglas McArthur, chief of staff of the United States Army.

General MacArthur says:

"Under the terms of the League of Nations the United States Army is required to maintain a standing army of at least half a million men in order to be fully prepared to act. And that is absurd.

"This would be nearly four times the present strength of the American army. It would be nearly nine times its present combat strength.

"Pacifistic gentlemen who want us in the League so that we can reduce armaments to the point where we are another one. In the classic language of the prize ring, General MacArthur has handed the pot and gone to work in the jaw.—Washington Times.

ARE YOU PREPARED TO FIGHT FIRE?

How would you fight a sudden fire in your home? This is a question that every man, woman and child should be prepared to answer. Year by year as our population increases the toll paid to this evil enemy of mankind grows greater and greater.

Five hundred million dollars a year is the staggering loss exacted by the fire demon, but even this huge sum cannot compensate the victims for their grief and discouragement as they suffer the loss of loved ones and see possessions that cannot be bought with money ruthlessly consumed by the flames.

The knowledge that so much of this loss is preventible does not make it any less bitter. When a fire starts it is an infant, but a few seconds later it may be a roaring monster that overwhelms the puny efforts of unaided human hands.

Preparedness is half the battle. The water bucket and hose are effective if they are immediately available, but often the very incident that started the fire may have rendered the water supply unavailable.

Every home, every farm, and every apartment in the land should be protected with the simple, inexpensive and efficient hand fire extinguishers that are now available. With them it does not matter if the flames are caused by burning gasoline or other material, because they smother the oxygen supply necessary for the maintenance of fire. Water may spread such a fire.

Every householder owes it to his family to equip the home with hand fire extinguishers, so many of them as are needed. They should be kept where they can be reached quickly. Everyone in the house should know where they are. You may well thank your heavenly stars some day that you were thus prepared.

CHILD HEALTH PROGRAM TO BE GIVEN HERE

By Dr. Frances M. Hennessy and Miss Grace Congdon, R. N.

The Children's Fund of Michigan will conduct a series of classes in Maternal and Infant Hygiene in Charlevoix during the month of July.

All mothers are invited to attend and are urged to bring their daughters that are juniors or seniors in High School.

There will be four classes, one each week for four consecutive weeks starting in the localities as printed below:

July 6—10:00 a. m. Charlevoix; 3:00 p. m. Boyne.

July 7—10:00 a. m., East Jordan; 2:00 p. m. Ironton Lake.

July 8—10:00 a. m. Boyne Falls; 2:00 p. m. Marion.

July 9—To be scheduled later; 3 p. m., Bay Shore.

July 10—To be scheduled later; 3:30, Marion Center.

William Penn and His "Holy Experiment"

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

With just 200 years and then an Englishman gave to the world a new idea. A government which recognized modern ideas of a right of the people which guaranteed religious and civil liberty. The man was William Penn, and this is the story of his "holy experiment."

In 1681 William Penn was a seventeen-year-old student at Christ Church, Oxford. His father, a distinguished admiral of the British navy, was in high favor at the court because he had always been a former companions of friendship and had aided in the restoration of king Charles II to the throne. His son was inheritance with the scions of the nobility who had remained loyal to the Stuarts and was receiving an education which would fit him to follow in the footsteps of his father, the old sea dog, and to obtain preferment at the hands of King Charles.

But, unlike the other young men of the time, there was a vein of serious thought in young Penn and he had become much concerned with the problem of religious liberty. Even while attending a high church college he was secretly attending the meetings and listening to the doctrines of the Quakers, a despised and outlawed sect which had sprung up during the Roundheads' control. It was during this time that young Penn began to tour of the prison of a group of Quakers in Ponti Dolecita in the Low world. But it was to be many years before Penn was to see those pious nonconformist but himself to have a hand in bringing them about.

At Oxford, Penn came under the influence of two men who were profoundly influencing the youth of that day—John Locke, the philosopher, and Thomas Ilive, a leading Quaker preacher.

In 1670 Penn was arrested in London for preaching to the street and was confined to the Tower, but, as he wrote, "the Tower was the worst argument in the world to convince me. For silence was to me rather consent, and I found force for religion never could be in the right." Penn spent his months in prison writing on religion and on conscientious liberty. Finally he was brought to trial and was tried and forthwith by conscience. By this time trial by jury in England had become a farce, for the judges were accustomed to disregard the verdicts of juries and imposed their own verdicts upon prisoners. However, young Penn's spirited defense of his own case inspired the jurymen to defy the judge and to assert their rights. They immediately acquitted Penn, whereupon the judge sent the jury to jail. The jury immediately brought suit, 12 hired judges punishment, and in their favor, and the former corruption of the jury trial system came to an end.

After Penn's release from prison he made a missionary journey through Holland and Germany and on Rhine founded a Quaker colony. Some of these Germans were later to aid him in founding his own commonwealth. In the meantime his father had died, but had called Lib h—h to promise. The promise to the world mind you to found your commonwealth," was his last whispered instruction to his Quaker son and one of the first acts of the admiral was to send a message to the king's brother, the duke of York, begging him, in memory of his services to the throne, to protect William Penn's interests. The duke did, but he was a debt of $16,000 owning owed him by Charles II. Although Charles was not exceedingly famous for conscientious paying and repaying debts, this is one which he seems to have been scrupulous about. The King was good in his way, and he made it possible for North America. This immediately suggested to Penn a chance to get out the pain for a Quaker colony which he had first hinted as a student at Oxford.

In a royal proclamation dated April 2, 1681, King Charles announced "in the inadvertent and clemency of Pennsylvania in America," he had granted a charter to William Penn to take possession of that new American province. "So the crown, knowing little of the value of it, granted like the most magnificent of monarchs, mountains, rivers, and forest, forests and land, prairie, sea, and iron that ever was given to a single proprietary," writes Sydney George Fisher in his book, "The Quaker Colonies." In the Yale University Penn Chronicles of America series. "In addition to giving Penn the control of Delaware, and with certain other qualities, that of New Jersey as well, the crown placed at the disposal of the Quakers 55,000 square miles of most valuable land, fertile territory, lacking only silent direct square miles of living as large as England and Wales.

Having received his charter Penn next drew up a constitution or "frame of government" in consultation with Algernon Sydney and other noted English liberals. The preamble and some of the provisions of this frame of liberty are the original of which is preserved in the Pennsylvania state archives at Lancaster, reads as follows:

"To all people to whom these present shall come—WHEREAS King Charles the second by his Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England for his Considerations therein mentioned hath been graciously pleased to give and grant unto me William Penn (by the name of William Penn Esq'r, son and heir of Sir William Penn deceased) and to my heirs and assigns forever all, that tract of land or province called Pennsylvania, in America with divers Great Powers Prehaeminencies Royalties Jurisdictions and Authorities necessary for the well-being and government thereof now know ye that for the Well being and Government of the said Province and for the Encouragement of all the Freemen and Planters that may be hereto encouraged by assurance of the powers afore mentioned I the said William Penn have declared Granted and Confirmed and by these presents for me my heirs and assigns do declare grant and Confirm unto all the Freemen and adventurers of my said Province and to the said Province these Liberties Franchises and properties to be held enjoyed and kept by the Freemen Planters and Inhabitants of and in the said province of Pennsylvania forever. VARIETY IN THE MENU

Fried Mush a Treat—Hasty Pudding Made Over.

Creamed Finnan Haddie.—Finnan haddie has come most successful outside of the fish dish, for which have stood him, after soaking in several changes of water and wipe. Make a white sauce as named and the fish and season for the dinner. Have ready with strips, fresh green pepper and remove the seeds, boil tender, drain with boiling water and thicken with the seasoned fish, cover with buttered crumbs and place in the oven for just long enough to heat their shapes. Make one minutes or until well heated with the crumbs well brown and, but serve them or instant fresh fish well seasoned and be sure to serve in plenty of butter. Garnish with cress, hard cooked egg and olives. The whites are used as a decorative around the edge of the platter for a more fancy and extensive dish.

French Potato Soup.—This has appeared before, but is such a favorite that one hopes to find a few new ones to become its affiliates. Slice a large potato or two, an onion or two—one may vary the proportions according to the number to be served. Slice the onions and put them to cook with two tablespoonfuls of butter. Shake a golden brown and then to the potatoes which are covered with boiling water. Cook until soft. Season, add hot milk and serve.

Use the fruit left in the tins when draining for jelly to make jam. If carefully looked over and the fruit is fresh, it will make most acceptable jam. By adding an orange, a few nuts, one will have a nice tasty preserve.

Canute Had Nothing on Michigan Court Crier

In 1825, before Michigan had become a state, the sessions of the supreme court were held in the territorial capitol building. The crier of the court was Isaac Ivey, familiarly known as "Colonel Ike" or "Third Meridian Ike." He was a large, portly man. One afternoon during the session of court a severe thunderstorm occurred. While the grimness was in consultation gathered around an ivory-handled stuff of office, gently snoring, an interlude to the ringing eminent witness, a terrific peal of thunder jarred the building and startled all its inmates. The general awakening, sprang upon his feet and, giving a fierce look on the floor with his staff, cried out in a tone little lower than the thunder: "Silence! The effect was tremendous, and for a time the court and bar were completely still with respect.—Detroit Free Press.

Churchyard yew is said to be the oldest in England, observes the Montreal Family Herald. Records, for instance, are assumed to have lived 1,000 years of age. Taxing men over the years, however, some have proved even Methuselah. It became one of the sights of Scotland to see the old yew tree in the Fortingall churchyard, where it was said to have lived 3,000 years. Its trunk was 56 feet in circumference, and it was 52 feet high, yet to death towards the end it showed signs. But where once it had been supported by stone pillars, the supports had fallen away, leaving the remaining branches and trunk to grow and decay when once the sap began to flow.

Tons of Red Sediment in Downpour of Rain

Frederick Chapman, hydrographer of the American geographic society, has continued his observations on red rain in southwestern America which he began in connection with H. J. Cosgrove in 1909. On the night of December 31, 1927, after a strong northerly wind had carried thick clouds of dust over Victoria and blown the fine particles small-sized rain fell steadily for several hours, but irregularly distributed falls of red rain. Mr. Chapman estimated the amount deposited on Salmon's ranch eight miles east of Mathewson, at 2.84, tons to the square acre, the commonwealth meteorologist, H. A. Hunt, estimated that there were 20 tons to the square mile.

The red dust on the mountains was approximately similar to the commonplace, ordinary brick dust, but it contained considerable quantities of iron and some lime. The latter would be derived from the limestone formations for plains and town streets. The hygroscopic power increased with early morning and reached a maximum at the end of September. On September 27, after a northerly gale, showers of red rain fell at 2.30 p. m., and after 3.30 p. m. the amount of the rain collected in a funnel in the garden of Mr. Chapman's home at Ivanhoe was 0.04 inch. Mr. Chapman's garden is covered with a fine film of red dust, which, however, soon leaves the surface of the leaves of the plants, and the exposed branches and flowers are being washed away when rain falls to keep the plant alive for a few more years.

Deafness, Says Edison, Not an Unmixed Evil

Discussing the affirmation of the big part of hearing, Thomas Edison said: "The deafness has been of great advantage to me in various ways. When in a telegraph office I could not hear the sounders, and relied entirely on the noise at which I operated, unlike the other operators, I was not bothered by the outside noises. Again, in experimenting on the telephone, I used to hear the faintest noise as I could hear. This made the telephone commercial, as the earphone telephone receiver of Bell was too weak to be used as a transmitter commercially. I was the inventor with the phonograph. The great defect of that instrument was the rapid decline of the overtones in music, and the talking originally by Bell, which worked over one year, 20 years a day, Sunday and all, to get the word perfect, was completed in a week after I got the phonograph. When this was done, I knew that what I had done could be done—which was a fact—and I then left the thing to be perfected by others. Deafness is an unmixed evil."

In 1825, before Michigan had become a state, the sessions of the supreme court were held in the territorial capitol building. The crier of the court was Isaac Ivey, familiarly known as "Colonel Ike" or "Third Meridian Ike." He was a large, portly man. One afternoon during the session of court a severe thunderstorm occurred. While the grimness was in consultation gathered around an ivory-handled stuff of office, gently snoring, an interlude to the ringing eminent witness, a terrific peal of thunder jarred the building and startled all its inmates. The general awakening, sprang upon his feet and, giving a fierce look on the floor with his staff, cried out in a tone little lower than the thunder: "Silence! The effect was tremendous, and for a time the court and bar were completely still with respect.—Detroit Free Press.

Ancient English Oak

Churchyard yew is said to be the oldest in England, observes the Montreal Family Herald. Records, for instance, are assumed to have lived 1,000 years of age. Taxing men over the years, however, some have proved even Methuselah. It became one of the sights of Scotland to see the old yew tree in the Fortingall churchyard, where it was said to have lived 3,000 years. Its trunk was 56 feet in circumference, and it was 52 feet high, yet to death towards the end it showed signs. But where once it had been supported by stone pillars, the supports had fallen away, leaving the remaining branches and trunk to grow and decay when once the sap began to flow.

ORDINANCE NO. 166

An ordinance to permit the wiring of porch or entrance electric lights on dwelling houses ahead of the city meter for the purpose of lighting the streets and alleys of said city, and to provide penalties for the violation thereof.

THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX ORDAINS:

Section 1. For the purpose of this ordinance:

"A porch or entrance" to a dwelling house shall be any porch or enclosure that front or part facing a public street or public alley that is open and not obstructed in any way.

"An enclosed porch or inclosed entrance" shall be any porch or enclosure, the front or part facing a public street or public alley that is inclosed by glass, glass and wood or any other material.

Section 2. It shall be lawful for the owner or occupant of any dwelling house located within the City of Charlevoix to install and maintain on a porch or entrance to said dwelling house, facing on any public street or public alley, an electric light of not to exceed forty watts power for the purpose of lighting said public street or public alley without having the said electric light pass through the city meter in said dwelling house.

Section 3. This ordinance shall be in force and effect from and after its adoption and passage.

Adopted by the Common Council of the City of Charlevoix at a regular meeting thereof at the council room in said city held on the 22nd day of June A. D. 1931 and the Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one (1931).

I hereby certify that the adoption of Ordinance No. 166, entitled "An Ordinance to Permit the wiring of porch or entrance lights on dwelling houses ahead of the city meter for the purpose of lighting the streets and alleys of said City; and to provide penalties for the violation thereof," was adopted at a regular meeting of the Common Council of the Charlevoix held on the 22nd day of June A. D. 1931 by a three-thirds majority vote of all the aldermen elect of said city and was published in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed, published and circulated in the City of Charlevoix, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, on the 22nd day of June A. D. 1931.

Ray S. Hamilton, City Clerk.

Nicholls Street Curb and Gutter, Special Assessment District No. 14.

Resolved by the common council of the city of Charlevoix, that the roll of special assessment for the purpose of defraying that part of the cost which the council decided should be paid and borne by special assessment for the purpose of constructing and installing a combination curb and gutter, together and including the cost of survey, plans, specifications and expenses incidental thereto, along both sides of Nicholls Street in the said City of Charlevoix, which was ordered to the council at said city by the board of assessors on the 6th day of May 1931, and which was duly reported by the council to the city by the board of assessors of said city on the 25th day of May 1931 at which time and place opportunity was given all persons interested to be heard, and the same is hereby confirmed as reported.

Resolved further that the amount to be paid and borne by the city council is hereby divided in five equal parts, one part of which part shall be collected on or before sixty days from confirmation of said roll by the assessor roll and the balance of said roll in four equal parts one each year at the time fixed by law for the collection of city taxes together with the annual interest at the rate of six per cent per annum on the unpaid installments.

Resolved further that the city clerk shall report to the city assessor a description of each lot or parcel of land so assessed in said special assessment roll and the amount of the assessment levied upon each and the name of the person to whom assessed against which the assessment was levied, and the city assessor shall enter the several sums so assessed as a tax upon the several lots and premises described and so reported respectively. Provided, however, that the owner of any lot may pay the assessment shall be collected direct from the owner of said lot, and in accordance with the provisions of Act No. 215 of the Public Acts of 1895, as amended being "An Act to provide for the incorporation of cities of the Fourth Class."

Resolved further that the city of Charlevoix shall borrow the sum of Five Hundred Thirty-seven and 50/100 dollars in anticipation of the receipts of the special assessment roll and for the purpose of defraying the cost of the improvement for which said assessment was levied and that the bonds of the city of Charlevoix shall be issued therefor in three interest bearing bonds to be known as Special Assessment Curb and Gutter Bonds, payable on the first day of June of each year and that the mayor and city clerk be and they are hereby directed and empowered to issue said bonds, pledging the full faith and credit of the said city for the payment of said bonds.

Resolved further that the amount to be paid and borne by the city at large is hereby fixed at the sum of $107.50, and that $107.50 shall be and the same hereby is appropriated for the payment of the same.

Ayes—Bergeon, Fisher, Hunter, Kibler, Smith, Webster. Nays—None. Absent—None.

MAN DIES FROM FALL

SCAFFOLD GIVES WAY WHILE WORKING NEAR IRONTON

Samuel Woodworth who was apparently injured late Saturday when a scaffold upon which he was working suddenly gave way died at the local hospital early yesterday forenoon.

He was working on a building near Ironton at the time of the accident and immediately following was taken to the hospital for treatment.

Examination developed that several bones were broken and that his head carried many bruises. Even reports were to the effect that the injuries were not considered especially serious and predictions made that full recovery was only a question of a few days. Later complications entered in to the case, resulting in his death Wednesday forenoon.

CONSTRUCTION OF COURTS WATCHED WITH INTEREST

Local tennis players are interested and anxiously awaiting the construction of the new courts and eagerly awaiting the completion of the work anticipating an opportunity to try them out in the near future. The work is progressing nicely with every prospect of their being ready for service by the middle of this month.

SUMMER WEATHER

Summer weather on the region square in the face and with summer frame early this week, making for almost an ideal weather as we have experienced in Charlevoix. At that we were favored as compared with other localities throughout the state where the thermometers registered several degrees higher than in this immediate locality. During the hot period bathing beaches were well patronized early and late in the forenoon and afternoon and not so much during the warmest hours of the day.

YOUTH DROWNED AT BOYNE CITY

FIRST FATALITY OF THE SEASON IN THIS REGION

The first drowning of the season in this region was reported from Boyne City late Sunday afternoon, when a 17 year old youth lost his life in Boyne City bathing beach, Lake Charlevoix. Several others at the beach were unable to render assistance.

Albert Howard was the name of the youth who was drowned and the body constituted that young Howard had a weak heart and that he probably overexerted himself in the swimming contest and was down before assistance could reach him. He has made his home for several years with his grandmother, Mrs. W. H. Rogers and a number of his fellow school mates and brothers.

Local fans following all report making an excellent catch on the opening of the season, many fishermen taking the log haul both as to quality and number, with like reports being made on all local bass lakes in this region.

Mrs. E. C. Sterritt motored to Grand Rapids last Friday to visit her brother.

Captain H. J. Gillich and R. G. Ewing of Grand Haven were business visitors here Monday and Tuesday, during which time they inspected the ferry at Ironton and the S. S. Sanford. They left on the Manitou Tuesday, leaving the Sanford at Frankfort, after making an inspection of the steamship.

Dr. B. G. Mattson of Manitou, was in Charlevoix Monday visiting local friends.

WARNER OLAND IN NEW CHAN SEQUEL

Following Charlie Chan's success in tracking down a murderer in "Charlie Chan Carries On," the same Oriental detective again displays his brilliant deductions in "The Black Camel," Fox Films' second offering of a series based on Earl Derr Biggers' famous fiction character.

In "The Black Camel," coming to the Palace Theatre Thursday Charlie's detailing is all done in and around Honolulu, and to assure the necessary realism, Director Hamilton MacFadden took his entire company to Hawaii, where much of the production was filmed.

Warner Oland again enacts the role of Charlie Chan, but in the new story Ellissa has the romantic lead, with Dorothy Revier, Sally Eilers, Victor Varconi, Robert Young, Murray Kinnell and William Post in the supporting cast. The unusual plot and predictions made that full recovery was only a question of a few days. Later complications entered in to the case, resulting in his death Wednesday forenoon.

MRS. SARAH M. ADAMS PASSES

WELL-KNOWN PIONEER OF MARION TOWNSHIP

Funeral service for Mrs. Sarah M. Adams was held from her late residence in Marion township Monday afternoon She was the widow of the late James B. Adams who passed away thirteen years ago.

Mrs. Adams was a resident of Marion township for more than fifty years, and until recent years one of the most active citizens, one who took an interest in public affairs, township, county, state and national, and who was well informed on the various domestic affairs. She will be remembered in the years to come for her many kindnesses to those in need and distress to whom she was always ready to extend a helping hand to the limit of her power.

During recent years, due to advanced age, she was forced to relinquish practically all of her public activities, but at all times kept in touch with friends and neighbors, their welfare and prosperity, even though she was approaching her eighty-sixth birthday anniversary, when she passed away Friday, June 26th at her Marion farm home where she lived for more than half a century.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams came from Dearborn, Mich., to Marion township in 1881. They celebrated their golden wedding anniversary some little time prior to the passing of Mrs. Adams, an event that was attended by local friends and many of their distant points. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Clara Gregory of Dearborn, Mich., and one son, Jay H. Adams of Marion township.

The final service was attended by friends from a distance as well as local.

Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Orr, Mr. Murray and Mrs. Mary Foster of Detroit, Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Gregory of Belleville of Northport.

Mr. and Mrs. George Bullock, Mrs. Zack Bullock, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Horn and Mrs. Ted Mott of Detroit.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Smith and Miss Bertha Smith of Bellaire.

Rev. J. E. Lockyer officiated at the service.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving Levenston and children arrived from Chicago Friday. They have opened their summer place near Ironton for the season. Mr. Levenston returned to Chicago Sunday but intends to spend week ends with his family at the Lake Charlevoix summer home.

Emerald La Blanche goes to Grand Rapids Saturday where with others he will be a guest of the Grand Rapids vaudeville in Western Michigan, the Herald for an eight day trip to Niagara Falls. During his absence the Herald-Review in Charlevoix will be made by Emerald's brothers and sisters.

Dr. and Mrs. Russell Palmer of St. James, were visiting Charlevoix friends Thursday and Friday.

Mrs. J. P. Maloney, daughter and son of Point Park, Ill., arrived here Tuesday and the following day continued their trip to St. James where they will spend their summer vacation.

Lyman M. Covey of Grand Rapids, representing "The Gentlemen of Fortune" was a Charlevoix visitor.

Mr. and Mrs. William V. Scheevill of New York City are located at 201 Nicholls street for the season, the same cottage as occupied by them during several past summers.

DIETRICH PASSES TEST OF COURAGE IN "DISHONORED"

Marlene Dietrich, Paramount's new Russian sensation, whose introduction to American film audiences in "Morocco" and "The Blue Angel" was an overwhelmingly success, has taken rank with Hollywood's daredevil stunt men, and proved herself a woman of highest courage.

Without hesitation she boarded an open plane for a night flight on a shooting location for scene in her latest picture "Dishonored", to which she is co-starred with Victor McLaglen, he man boss of "What Price Glory?" and "The Cock-Eyed World," and dropped by parachute, while a battery of ten cameras, strategically placed by Director Josef von Sternberg, took pictures of the parachute descending. Miss Dietrich, recorded the undertaking. Huge used in studio filming, made the flight and the silhouette landing spot on return to the field possible.

Dishonored, which the Palace theatre will feature for two days, beginning Sunday next, is the story of a woman spy in the secret service during wartime Miss Dietrich as an embittered woman impressed into the secret service by an unscrupulous lover drawn foreign spies in Vienna, that she is sent to Russia. It is in this assignment that the daring airplane flight and parachute jump are required. Pursuing to evasive foreign agents, who murder her confidence and leads her lonely, she is drawn into a dilemma in which she has to choose between love and duty. Her choice and the resulting action makes the smashing climax of the picture.

Dishonored" is the third Von Sternberg picture to feature Miss Dietrich's talents. "Morocco" and "The Blue Angel" both having been directed by him.

The Misses Thekla, Belle and Rose Greenfeldler of Chicago are spending their summer vacation in Charlevoix, their usual custom in past years.

MRS. WINDER LOSES FATHER

LAST WEEK AT BLOOMINGTON, ILLINOIS

Mrs. C. J. Winder left for Bloomington, Ill., Wednesday night upon receipt of a message that her father John Small, Jr., was critically ill. Mrs. Winder arrived at her destination Thursday at about 4:30 p. m., only to find that death had taken her parent more than four hours earlier, he having passed away soon after one o'clock p. m.

Mr. Small was in his 76 year at the time of his passing He was a Yale graduate and also an alumnus of Drake Theological Seminary and for more than half a century an outstanding figure in Rock River Conference.

Mrs. Winder is the only next descendent, more distant relatives are several grandchildren.

B. I. LOSES PIONEER

The sympathy of this community is extended to the relatives of John Burns who passed this life on June 29th. His death was due to general debility superinduced by an attack of grippe.

Mr. Burns was born in Montreal, Canada, in 1859 and came with his parents to the island in 1857. Thus by his passing the island loses one more of its pioneer settlers

He was a quiet, peaceable, law abiding citizen beloved by young and old. His simplicity of character his trustful nature, gained for him the esteem and respect of all with whom he came in contact. He was one of the first to taste the bitterness and cruelty of war. Shortly after the United States entered the World War his son "Billy" gave up his life for the cause, and fills a soldiers grave in Lorraine Flanders field.

He is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Wm. U'Dimenil of St. James, Mich. and Mrs. James Burns both of Monroe, Mich., and two sisters, Mrs. John G. Gallagher of Green Bay, Wis. and Mrs. Hugh Mallory, of Marquette, and two brothers, Mr. Tom McCauley of St. James, and Mr. Dan McCauley of Manistique, Mich.

The funeral was Wednesday at the Holy Cross Church, Rev. E. F. Neuhocker officiating. Burial in Holy Cross Cemetery.

Mrs. J. Renabon of Charlevoix made the trip over and back on the Sanford Thursday.

Mrs. Peter Neilson of Charlevoix arrived here this week enroute to Harbor Island where she will spend the summer.

Hilda Rann and Helen Chambers of Charlevoix were visitors here Wednesday

Mr. and Mrs. John Grill are visiting in Grand Rapids and Manistee making the trip by motor.

Mrs. Annie Mulhern and daughter Kibeler, accompanied by Jack O'Regan of Chicago, are here visiting relatives and friends.

Rev. E. F. Neuhecker returned home Friday

Mr. and Mrs. Ward Bennett of Elizabeth City, N. C., and son Kenneth of Durand, Mich., are here visiting friends.

Mrs. C. E. Keith and her friend, Mrs. Irish of Des Moines, Iowa, are at the Rob Cottage "Pioneer Lodge" to spend the summer.

Miss Margaret Gallagher returned Saturday from Charlevoix.

Miss Harriet Vandenberg who has been visiting in Grand Haven for the past month returned home.

T. B. CAMPAIGN HAS BEEN COMPLETED IN CHARLEVOIX COUNTY

We are glad to announce that the tuberculosis campaign started last September has been completed and a very small percentage of infection found. It is particularly gratifying to note how the infection has been decreasing by the constant testing program.

The results this year show that a total of 4,001 herds were tested consisting of 19,012 head of cattle with only 18 reactors being found in the county. When figured upon a per centage basis we find that the per centage infection is only .16 of one per cent, which is indeed very slight. It is interesting to compare the results this year with those of 1926 and 1927 when the last test was completed. That time we found 1,014 herds tested consisting of 5,556 head of cattle with 48 reactors being found, which in that case gave a .57 of one per cent infection.

With the exception of about two months all the tuberculous testing was done by Dr. Pomeroy of Boyne City. To hurry the program along Dr. Merlau of the State Department was engaged for about two months last fall.

From now on the tuberculosis program will be conducted entirely by the State instead of by the County so in the future the appropriation for tubercular work will not be born by the local appropriation. At the present time all the infected herds have been retested with no reactors so a good job is completed and one that means the approval of both the consumer and producer of dairy products. Since the inauguration of tuberculous testing there has been a decrease of this disease among humans, which makes us all feel that this program is well worth while and should be continued.

Yours very truly,

R. C. Mollenkamp,
County Agricultural Agent

CLARE RETAN DIES SUDDENLY

AT SUMMER HOME OF FRIEND IN WINDSOR, CANADA

Clare Retan, former attorney general, prominent in state affairs and well known Michigan citizen died suddenly at Windsor Wednesday, at the summer home of a friend, J. C. Reaman, a victim of heat prostration.

Mr. Retan has many personal friends in this region, particularly at and around Charlevoix, where he has been a frequent visitor in past years, all of whom will regret his passing.

I. O. O. F. CAMPAIGN

CHINKAPIN TREE PROOVES TO BE TOGUE-TWISTER

A three cellable week proved an expensive dose to the filming of "The Finger Points." The Pine Ballroom production starring Richard Barthelmess which comes to the Palace Theatre Saturday, July 5th, only.

The word was "chinkapin" and it was written in the script by John Monk Saunders to be spoken by Barthelmess who stands the brunt of a newspaper reporter. From the South, the word itself was coupled with type which created such consternation among those that several takes were necessary to record the scene properly. The chinkapin tree is either of two outstanding trees which flourish in the South. The word is derived from the American Indian observancies.

"The Finger Points" was directed by John Francis Dillon and presents Fay Wray as the latest Barthelmess leading lady. The story itself is of a very sensational and daring nature, dealing with gangland and based on a famous modern criminal case. The supporting cast includes Robert Ellis, Regis Toomey, Clarke Gable, Noel Madison and others.

GENTRY BROS. FAMOUS SHOW

TWO PERFORMANCES TO BE GIVEN JULY 4TH

Yes, they are the original Gentry Brothers Famous showing that has toured area and has held about to the children.

This answers a question asked many times since the visit of the show here Saturday, July 4, first because Lucie And Simplicio, they are owned and managed by Henry R. Gentry, who established them in 1905.

Fifteen years ago, on account of failing health Mr. Gentry induced his brothers to sell their property, Rescovering, he bought and with a small equip in managing the educational institution which caters to refined audiences, especially ladies and children.

Many will recall the hordes and herds of trained animals, dogs, monkey ponies, mare, goats and such, that delighted children a decade ago. The children of today have heard of them only as a business story. Now they may see the shows in fact.

On account of traffic congestion Gentry Brothers shows give no street parade. This conserves the strength of the trained animals. Prices of admission are twenty-five cents for children and thirty-five cents for adults.

As a special added attraction the shows offer Lucie and Simplicio Godino the famous Siamese twins born joined together. These young men present a real act. They can dance quite as much as any other young men.

The shows will be located on Inn Ball park. Doors will open afternoon at two and night at seven Saturday, July 4.

OUTDOORS CURE FOR DEPRESSION SAYS HEAD OF GAME ASSOCIATION

"Take a vacation, relieve the high tension caused by the harrowing incarceration of the depression and save your health; and, at the same time, help preserve the forests, fields and streams for the benefit of children yet unborn."

There were more than 43,000,000 people who took vacations in the out-of-doors last year, conservation show, and millions of those camped out. There were also thousands of fatalities, grade and fatals fires started by careless campers. These fires destroyed an incalculable number of wild birds, feral animals, fish, and property estimated at millions of dollars.

Many of the careless campers, and others, too, were burned to death by them from all avoidable loss from fires, and also from the loss from natural causes—lightning. Be careful of cigarettes, pipes and camp fires.

RED ON WHITE GROUND IS COLOR SCHEME FOR SUMMER

MAYBE you fancy tobacco combined delightfully red and white. It this year would seem to all but foreshadow the smoking in fashion's train for even conservatives want it nowadays.

Indeed, the color scheme is intrigued with the idea of red and white, and if they do not devise it in one way they do in another. That is where the material itself is almost sure to insist on a white background or vice versa as the vehicle is engraved by figure or with the material can be picked or compromising the white meaning with red accessories. But red and white seem to be in full and confidence.

In the second wedding a gay frock is the bride's, and she will, of course, should prove a tough temptation. The

ACCIDENT PREVENTION

During 1926, according to the National Safety Council, America's accidental death toll reached a total of 99,000 lives—the highest annual figure on record.

The motor vehicle toll—22,000 lives—was highest, closely followed by 20,000 deaths in homes. It is said that three billion dollars is a modest estimate of the direct cost of accidents for the year.

The United States has the highest accident toll of any country in the world—principally due to automobiles. Carelessness and ignorance are genuine menaces to the health and happiness of the nation.

Only in the case of school children has any definite accident reduction been made. Safety education in schools has not only prevented current accidents, but instills a safety message that is carried through life. During a period when accidental deaths to persons of all ages increased 28 per cent, deaths among children under 15 dropped 2.3 per cent.

Every person has the power to prevent accidents—and unless he uses that power nothing in the world can stop the toll from rising.

DRASTIC ANTI-GUN LAWS UNPOPULAR

The anti-revolver law, that old stand-by and hope of the crime reformers, did not fare so well in the legislatures that met during the winter and spring of 1927.

In that time forty-six legislatures were in session—and in only five of them were stringent anti-gun laws, of the Sullivan Law type, introduced. Of those, three did not get beyond committee, and the other two, in Pennsylvania and Ohio, were rewritten so as to bring them into line with the Uniform Firearms Bill.

This bill, which protects the right of the honest citizen or sportsmen who wants to own a small arm, and at the same time makes it difficult for a criminal to obtain a weapon, is now in force in several states. It has been given the blessing both of sportsmen's associations, and of persons who take a deep interest in the problem of crime prevention and wish to see it advance along sane and sensible lines. It does not please the fanatics on either side—but it does work to the benefit of the public in contrast with unconditional anti-gun laws of the "make-more lawbreakers" type.

PAYING THE FIDDLER

It is predicted that the Treasury deficit for the current fiscal year will reach the billion-dollar mark and that there will be an equally imposing deficit during the fiscal year to come.

As a result, unless there is a sizeable increase in Federal income, the national debt will show a two-year increase of $32,000,000,000.

Additional Federal taxation appears to be inevitable. It is suggested that a Federal sales tax on gasoline be levied, that income tax exemptions be lowered, that estate or inheritance taxes be boosted, and so on.

This will be discouraging for business and individuals now straining every fiber to keep going. We must, so to speak, pay for our governmental sins—for waste, extravagance, ventures into business, and the last $40,500,000,000 Congress. Taxes are high now—but it would seem that we "haven't seen nothin' yet."

MILKING THE MOTORIST

The poor motorist is becoming one of the tax-collector's best sources of revenue. Last year he paid taxes exceeding $2,000,000 a day—and he will pay more this year. The gasoline tax, the registration fee, the personal property tax, the driver's license fee and similar levies are making a steadily larger hole in the driver's purse. Since 1921 total motor vehicle tax income has increased at the rate of 14 per cent a year—and gas tax income at the rate of 79 per cent a year. In spite of this, annual increases in motor vehicle registration have been less than 11 per cent, the exact figures for highways have gone up but six per cent.

So far during 1931 ten legislatures have given the gas tax a boost toward—and in one state a seven-cent tax just escaped passing. The gasoline tax will approach $600,000,000 this year and the total motor vehicle tax will be close to $1,500,000,000.

CHEER NEWS

With official statements showing that bank deposits throughout the country are increasing, and that business failures are fewer; that wholesale and retail prices have gone down, and that agricultural products bring better prices, it may not be improper to do a little cheering on account of these evidences of better times.

DEFICITS CAUSE HIGH TAXES

According to an article in the New York Times of May 31, the Post Office Department has registered a deficit of $589,591,604 during the past 11 years.

The highest annual deficit occurred in 1921—over $187,000,000. The second highest, $98,000,000, was levied against the public treasury last year.

IS IT INTERESTING NEWS?

Will wonders never cease? We get a great kick out of reading about strangers when the information conveys an impression of beauty or charm, but we don't quite get the tabloid's idea of interesting society notes. Nine lines of two examples, the first of which is the kind we like to read even though we don't know the people. A North Carolina paper says:

"At the opening of the summer season guests from all over the Carolinas were picturesquely entertained last night by Mr. and Mrs. C. D. Welch. Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Armstrong, Mr. and Mrs. Plate Durham, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Julian. It was quite noticeable that cotton and durene were the beaux as well as the belles of the ball. Mrs. Archibald Linebergeren of Belmont was stunning in a gown of durene.

Now that gives us a pretty picture, some fashion news, and a bit of optimistic textile talk. But this is the way a New York tabloid describes the guests at a recent wedding:

"Mr. Peter Pepper, old thing, is of the Philadelphia Peppers, and Miss Belle Ogmont who comes of haughty ancestry was there," etc.

What the deuce difference, since we don't know them—does it make to us, whether Peter is an old thing, and Belle haughtily ancestored?

WHY GOOD TIMES ARE COMING

It takes no gift of prophecy to foresee that in the long run the relations of capital and labor will prove to have been among the most fertile in American history. In diverse ways the country is making a fresh examination of itself, its problems and its aspirations. Everywhere is substituting work and thrift for speculation.

"We are beginning to look at common problems from the other man's point of view," says William L. Chenery, well known editor, in a summary of the lessons of Adversity. "Not because we are more virtuous or unselfish than before, but because we realize that in so other way can we arrive at rational solutions."

The Smoot-Hawley Act has thus compelled Americans to think about the tariff with minds less prejudiced than ever before. Because times have been hard, they have learned that foreign trade is a two-way street, and that if a nation won't buy, it can't sell.

"As a nation we have comprehended more of the essentials of world trade in the last twelve months than in any previous decade of our national existence," declares Mr. Chenery. "We shall do well to act upon what we have learned. We have drifted long enough. Never has leadership had a better chance. As our problems are grave, so too is our opportunity great for an advance from all directions.

In many ways the necessities of the times seem to be driving Americans to confront conditions and to think about policies which they preferred to ignore or to accept without question so long as conditions were easy. Andrew Mellon has been quoted as saying: "We still have much to learn in the maintenance of prosperity on an even keel and the achievement of a process of orderly and broad distribution of products and services."

Apparently it is just becoming evident that the United States cannot have orderly distribution and economic anarchy at the same time. People must learn to cooperate if they are to prosper.

CLEANLINESS IN INDUSTRY

One of the outstanding developments of the recent depression period has been industry's activity in the direction of employee health conservation. Hundreds of plants have used the opportunity for renovating and cleansing their buildings, and for the installation of improved facilities for protecting the health of the workers.

"There is business sagacity as well as idealism behind industrys health movement," it is pointed out. "Firms that provide adequate sanitary conveniences profit financially, and more over better morale, greater efficiency and lessened turnover have been found to result from the maintenance of health and hygenic standards in industry."

The expenditures involved in conserving employee health are trifling compared with the annual $500,000,000 loss now sustained by industry through employee illness and absence. Adequate supplies of towels and soap, together with generous amounts of hot water to permit and encourage frequent handwashing are inexpensive items yet they do much to increase staff efficiency. Doctors point out that clean hands are important aids to health and that washing will rid the hands not only of the visible grime but of the even more harmful invisible germs which, given proper conditions, may result in disease.

Some German has invented a new paper money that will not burn, tear, or crumple. Wonder whether it can be inflated?

It is said that the usual crop of icebergs is not coming down from the region of the north pole into the Atlantic. Maybe here is another industry that has been slowed down by the depression.

Law-breaking has become in a way a national sport—concurred in by persons in all walks of life. And still our elected officials continue to grind out more and more laws to add to the already sagging statute books.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litchert

"There who listened to President Hoover's recent address before the Republican editors of Indiana, must have been impressed, not only by the cordial Hoosier reception accorded the Chief Executive, but with the especially vigorous applause which greeted every remark of the President devoted to extolling our sound American nationalism. This significant fact ought to impress our internationalist theorists, who frequently, like the frogs in the meddle, make so much noise they fool themselves, but it will not impress them. They are never bound by such materialistic things as facts.

The simple statement by the President that we have no regulated immigration during the depression, in order to save American jobs for American workers, that for the first time in our history more people are leaving our shores than are entering, was greeted with a storm of applause. There was scarcely less enthusiasm over many other evidences of sound American doctrine. The President's defense of the tariff was warmly received, as was his statement to the effect that the best way for Americans to help restore prosperity to the world was to try to make America prosperous. In this connection President Hoover well said:

"It is not my purpose upon this occasion to discuss the relations of our many economic problems of other nations. I am not unmindful of our responsibilities or of the obligations of good will. But they will continue to agitate. Indeed, borrow words from the President's address—"to agitate for the adoption of economic patent medicines from foreign lands."

It is undoubtedly true that if as a part of the nation, all of us, great and small, will do our best toward restoring national conditions in America, if our business and political leaders will go about restoring confidence in the United States building for the World War, and who was killed in action June 16th, 1918, in Cantigny Sector, and European petroleum, it will not be long until America is once more on the way toward a new period of prosperity and progress. And a restoration of prosperity in America, will have its effect all over the world, for Uncle Sam, it is to be remembered, is the world's best customer, and he spends his money freely abroad. It is the very fact that he has little money to spend just now, that is hurting abroad. It is not our tariffs, nor our debt collections which are responsible for the falling off in the total of our foreign trade, because nearly two-thirds of what we buy abroad comes in duty free.

Primary school fund benefits from largest tax payment ever made by Telephone Company. Total of state, federal and local taxes of Michigan Bell amounts to $5.51 for each telephone in service during last year.

The Michigan Bell Company's tax payments this year to state, federal and municipal governments aggregate $5.51 for each of the average of 601,000 telephones in service during 1930 or one dollar and nine cents more than the entire annual telephone bill of every five telephone subscribers in the district at present. According to Walter J. Mineer, treasurer of the Michigan Bell Company, who signed the check, the Telephone Company pays more than 22 per cent of the total amount that will be paid into the state treasury by all public utility companies. Under the state, federal and telephone and telegraph companies, railroads, railway and express companies, and express companies pay taxes to the state based on their gross receipts, some from distant points drawn to Charlevoix for their early week vacation day trip.

Charlevoix is a resort town and we know that one serious storm from resort towns are, by most people considered traditional business. But here is a story that is true. Jay Jones and wife, accompanied by two other ladies while walking on the beach Sunday, saw a serpent tail lying on shore that was entering, was starting in the water about ten rods out and had a head about the size of a large rattlesnake. They saw the serpent at the same time and as Mr. Jones puts all strangers—in a youthful man, as we would, at 45 to 5 feet. It must, he says, claim the serpent as distinct from the Harbor Springs critter. It is stretty a big one.

The circus has come and gone. The band, the spotted mustangs, the patched canvas, the tinsel, the sawdust and the clown have invaded Charlevoix and left. It is small boy that had his circus fever so badly he could raise a quarter or read under the afternoon sun. The show came Thursday morning on the Steamer Grand State, and pitched their tent on the county grounds overlooking the village, holding forth afternoon and evening. The audiences were large and the town during the day had the appearance of a holiday. We have seen worse shows and we have seen better.

Charlevoix had a fire, and a bad one Thursday evening. About the time the circus closed and the people were on the street on their way home from the circus, and men left their wives and children, the boys their sweethearts, and hastened to the spot. It was discovered that the tug Martin was on fire, and her upper works entirely ablaze. For a moment it looked as if she must be destroyed, but a dense pall in so many willing hands soon quenched the fiery element, and by the time the crowd on inspection, in the morning showed that but little damage had been done, the tug Martin presented a circle of black coal and her window glass melted from the sash. The steam gauge was ruined, as was the compass. Except being badly charred, and the windows gone, the cabin was not much damaged. Capt. Toulouse will make only temporary repairs at present, and will go to Detroit for the permanent. The fire originated from the furnace.

UNCLE SAM IS

THE GOAT AGAIN

By George B. Lockwood

Having spent and obligated our selves for something like a hundred billion dollars in the World War, asking nothing out of it in the way of indemnities or territory, and getting quite what we asked for, the powers Americas saved from defeat, the payment of indemnities and the loss of territory, are now asking the United States to pay the German war debts.

Everybody realizes that the debts of the Allied powers to the United States will not be paid in full; it is only a question of how much can be collected before the debts get too old. The reparations debts and the debts of the allies to the United States, of course bear no natural relationship. The money we loaned France, for instance, was only repaid to the extent of the loans made after the armistice, and has used in the work of rehabilitation.

But when the United States, after refusing to sign the Versailles Treaty, Join the League of Nations, or collect anything of Germany, proceeded to enter the conferences engaged in settling the German war debts, our action began to be used as an excuse, not for allowing that the debt of the allied powers to the United States was in terrorem with and dependent upon Germany's payments in those powers. That ill feeling was created against America by our allegedly altruistic and internationalists, both in Germany and the allied nations.

The latest power behind all this camouflage has been the international banking and industrial interests which have placed billions of dollars of American capital in Europe. Since the days of these powers to the United States are a first mortgage on European wealth, the way to insure the standing of the second mortgages, representing private capital loaned at high rates of interest, is to throw out the public obligations to the United States.

The plan is designed to repudiate her debts to the United States, represents the loans that were uncritical to prevent economic collapse afterward, there is probably nothing we can do about it, except to be cautious and wary, in an effort to collect as an unthinkable folly. Many Americans believe that the best thing to do, to head off debt talk, is to wipe their accounts off the slate, and hereafter deal on a cash basis. That course has some practical and politically as possible.

The allied powers are proposing that Americans pay German reparations debts, they are, at the same time proposing in the way of economic or customs union between Germany and Austria, into which they would force all the other nations. In other words they are objecting the effort of Germany to build up a Reich and in a position to pay.

America's experience with European exploitation up to date has been a sorry one, one most Americans are keen to forget. Yet bolder and bolder grow the outcry of the propagandists in favor of cheaper political and economic readjustments in the United States in what Ramsay McDonald appropriately called "the European mess."

While the demand is made that the United States wipe out those debts the European powers are spending more and more money on military preparations. France is fortifying her frontier against Germany at enormous expense. Belgium is doing the same. Germany, the greatest sufferer from the World War, is spending more for these powers to enter more extensively into their preparations for the "next war"—a war from which Uncle Sam, if he uses his head, will be conspicuously absent.

The time is coming when a proper sense of self-respecting and self-preserving nationality will begin boldly to express itself in the United States. If Europe is going to organize her debts to the United States, and require America to pay the Germany reparations, on the case be plainly stated, and not juggled into a position where it can be said by the European powers that nations both allies and aliened, that we are playing the Shylock in not indorsing the idea. The World War has taught the American people that what is demanded of them by Europe is not moral leadership nor homegrown internationalism later is wanted from the United States, but a continuous cash subsidy, and a permanent sacrifice of American to European economic interests, perhaps the former will be worth the heavy price.

PLEDGED LAWBREAKERS

A poll taken of some 12,000 Protestant ministers by "The World Tomorrow," a publicist-religious journal of the pink persuasion, shows that a majority of the ministers responding to the poll declared that they would refuse to sanction or support any future war in which the United States might become involved, and about the same majority declared that it would not sanction or support even a defensive war in case the American government and people were attacked by the armed forces of a foreign power.

It is fair to say in behalf of the ministers of the country that they number in all about 180,000 and that presumably this poll was taken among those ministers who have for the past few years been bombarded by the big-fly organized and heavily financed propaganda of the ultra-pacifists and Internationalists. It is also fair to say in behalf of the ministers to whom the questions were addressed, expressed their full indignation at being asked whether or not they would defend their country in case an armed attack were made upon it.

If Theodore Roosevelt were alive it would be interesting to read his comment upon the attitude of those ministers who declare in advance that they would become violators of the Constitution and the laws of their country which make every citizen a member of the organized militia, subject to call in case of invasion or insurrection, and excusable from support of their government in such an emergency only to the extent of being permitted to accept non-combatant services. This spirit of resistance to law is becoming so common in the country as to constitute a grave problem, and it is discouraging to note that so many ministers are ready to condone and encourage it by preaching in advance to disobey the constitution and laws of the country at a time when the very existence of the government might be at stake.

It is discouraging, too, to note the growth of the tendency to approve the origin of force and violence by announcing in advance that if invaded there would be submission to it. Submit resistance to people who are by the protection of the American government and flag, only because behind that government and flag stands the force capable of quelling an appeal to violence by lawless elements.

Fortunately such declarations, while they may sow the seed of resistance to law and make the position of armed insurrection or invasion, some from distant points drawn to Charlevoix for their early week vacation day trip.

GOODBYE AND FAREWELL

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Kenyon left Mackinac Island on Tuesday for their old home at Charlevoix. Mr. Kenyon leaves at the conclusion of a long period of years of service in charge of the state park, the period of years emphasizing the value of his services to the Island. Throughout his time he has been an unobtrusive and modest administrative official, but would be continued to be misrepresented in the public by so weak or so disloyal that they would, in time of danger, repudiate the cause of their country and give aid and comfort to the enemy by withholding sanction or support for their country's cause.

The only remedy for this is constitute patriotism, patriotism will not be so much hurt as religion.

THREE HUNDRED FOLKS VISIT THE NEW CREAMERY

12,000 Pounds of Butter Made Last Week at Plant

The first Visitor's Day for the New JerCan Valley Co-operative Creamery was a huge success Farmers and their families from all sections of Charlevoix and Antrim Counties were present and were surprised by the handsome appearance of our latest agricultural institution. Great interest and enthusiasm was manifested by the visitors who were amazed at the wonderful change that had taken place in the building during the last two months.

On the program appeared Professor G. M. Trout from the Dairy Department of the Michigan State College, who told them the story of how butter was made and the care needed and how quality dictates the price, and finally, how good clean cream should be produced by every patron. Next, Mr. Reutz, Manager of the Ellsworth Creamery spoke of the wonderful success already enjoyed by the new organization. The first week that the creamery started they made more butter than the Resuss Creamery made during any one week in their first year, and during the second week we made more butter than Resuss made during any one week during their second year. Mr. Percy Penfold, the Manager of the Creamery, was then introduced and very modestly assurred the patrons of his sincere efforts to make the creamery a success. He thus far has demonstrated that he knows how to make good butter, and has already built an efficient group out of the inexperienced help employed by the creamery. Mr. John Martin from the Marketing Department of the Michigan State College gave a very splendid talk on the co-operative movement. Realizing what has been accomplished and what the future holds forth for the creamery, at the conclusion of the program everyone had a sample of the fine butter being made.

The new equipment and machinery was inspected. Everything has been carefully arranged so as to save additional steps and inconvenience. During the first week approximately 8,000 pounds of butter was made and during the second week over 12,000 pounds was made. This is most remarkable performance and speaks highly of the loyalty and co-operation of the dairy farmers. The cream-ery has already justified its existance, as the first payment was on the basis of 70c per pound where if the cream-ery was not in existence, and judging by past performances the farmers today would not be receiving over 16c or 17c per pound 70c to the time of organization the farmers in this area were receiving from 5 cents to 6 cents less per pound of butter fat than the price of 92 score butter for in each range of the ministers the creamery started there was only 1c difference between the price of butterfat and the price of 92 more butter in Chicago. In other words, instead of taking from 5 cents to 6 cents per pound less the difference has been narrowed to only one cent.

The final plea is "Give this New Creamery your business and patronage and you will receive all that is possible to give you." Just remember that the creamery is responsible for the higher prices paid for butter fat and even if outside interests will pay 2 or 3 cents more than the creamery can pay, it is only to wreck this new institution and not because they want to pay the high prices. Don't be fooled by this bait dangling before your eyes, but stay with the creamery and success will come to you and all dairy farmers in the territory.

Yours very truly,
B. C. Mellenamp,
County Agricultural Agent.

SUNDAY BEAUTIFUL DAY FOR AUTOMOBILE TRIPS

Several automobile parties made the trip to Middle and Cross Villages via the Lake Shore drive via Harbor Springs Sunday. Some continued the trip to Mackinaw City, while others drove from Mackinaw City to Cheboygan, Mullett Lake, and Petoskey. The day was fine, one such as could be fully enjoyed for a sun-day outing over the routes mentioned. At the same time other touring parties were driving to some favorite locations south for their Sunday outing, while those living at various places in Boyne City, some from distant points drawn to Charlevoix for their early week vacation day trip.

Boomerang

A railroad man was ready to make his usual run, his wife insisted on him to get her some turkey eggs at 25 cents through a friend. "I am a dirty country lad approached the engineer and asked him: 'Don't you want to buy some buzzard eggs?'

Seeing an opportunity to play a joke upon his wife, he gave the lad a nickel for them. About a month later he asked his wife:

"How are your turkeys getting along?"

"Oh, I decided it was getting too late for turkeys, so I put them in your lunch."—Forbes Magazine.

The Magic Mariner

PHILIPPE'S mythical ship, as described in an Icelandic saga, that sailed the seas without a pilgrim being aboard, may have been a vision of the future.

For scientists have reproduced the vessel that could sail from port to port at the will of man, and without a human being to steer it on its course, or take it past the rocky reef into safe harbor.

On September 20, 1927, the steamship Pulpit Point reached Auckland, New Zealand, after a run of 21 days from San Francisco, during which no human hand had touched the steering gear. There were cobwebs on the wheel when the vessel reached the harbor at Auckland.

There the robot that had held the ship true to her compass course across the Pacific ocean day and night, for three weeks turned the helm over to an Auckland pilot.

The robot was "Metal Mike," the invention of the late Elmer Sperry, who also invented the gyroscope and the landing beacon now mounted 500 feet above mnonown Chicago to direct flyers safely to their airport and that can be seen in Milwaukee, Wis., 90 miles away.

"Metal Mike" had a gyroscope for a heart and brain, and devices attached to it kept the Pulpit Point straight on an unseen path over thousands of miles of sea. The robot can steer a ship with greater precision than could be achieved by the most expert human pilot. It always knows the true north, and its hands never leave the wheel for an instant.

While the voyage of the Pulpit Point was awe-inspiring it was only an inkling of what the future holds in store. Scientists and engineers since that memorable trip here demonstrated that ships can be sailed without a single human being aboard, that trains can be run in the same way, and that fleets of airplanes could be sent to bomb cities in the wars of the future, all flown by robots and directed by radio.

Incomparable as with small working models have shown that ships or trains can be maneuvered entirely by robots. Recent stunts put on by scientists to prove the value of their brain children included the operation of ships and cars entirely by robots, that responded to instructions voiced over the radio.

The ship and train models were controlled absolutely by spoken commands. They stopped at the word "Stop." They started forward again when told to "Go along there." Vibrations of the human voice through a microphone were received which in turn sent out radio impulses to radio receiving sets, that started machines that operated the models.

Safety for human passengers and crews was sure. After each piece was mastered of recent years, new devices are added to the sets, and more and many of them are now in use.

The new submarines of the United States navy have on them what might be called a "mechanical brain" by which they can dive, navigate and fire torpedoes to its destination entirely by robot control. Every detail of the operation of the submarine is controlled by the mechanical brain.

A robot that will bring help to ships driven ashore in the life saving service is being added to the equipment of many coast lifers. This robot is a small radio transmitter in a hand-operated device to supply the power. At the crash of the disaster to himself, it automatically sends out a series of S O S calls to its base in Milwaukee, Wis., 90 miles away.

"Metal Mike" has been adopted by the United States navy as the official robot pilot for the battleship Utah, and will be given a dinner by the University of Virginia, and delivered the three addresses in memory of Monroe and the anniversary will be given by Fred William S. Dodd, the historian of the University of Florida.

Although the principal ceremonial celebration will take place at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville, memorial services will center around Ash Lawn where to be made a part of national shrine. For this lovely old colonial house, surrounded by a 2,000-acre farm, has been purchased by the public by its owner, Mr. Johns, a patriotic Virginian who purchased it last year to prevent the estate from becoming divided and scattered and to preserve it as a place of inspiration for Americans.

Ash Lawn was the home for 26 years during the most active period of the life of James Monroe, the last of the famous Virginia dynasty. Monroe himself never to have definitely decided on a name for this estate, nevertheless, persistently in Cabot. The term origin and authorship of the name Ash Lawn have been lost. Arnaldo Galland translated those into French between 1808 and 1810 and through between 1808 and the Arabian Nights were introduced to European readers. Although Mohammedan the Arabian Nights are the regarded as belonging to polite literature and those who read them are open to the charge of having a depraved taste.—Fitch-Gaylor Magazine.

Wolverine's Fur Valuable

Wolverine is listed as the most prized of long-haired furs and it is fairly expensive. The underwool is full and thick, with strong height to hair. The color is a rich brown; the center being an oval dark saddle edged with a pale tone. Domestic dyers consult the finish. The darkest and least coarse are the most valuable. This animal, known also as the carcajou or glutton, is found in the northern parts of the country and Canada, also in Russia, Siberia and Scandinavia. The description is taken from Gottlieb's "Fur Truths."

Goldsmith Poet Sold

Oliver Goldsmith's agreement to write a "new natural history of animals," dated 1769, was sold at London for $1,025. Under the agreement Goldsmith was to be paid five guineas (about $1,050) to write the eight volumes.

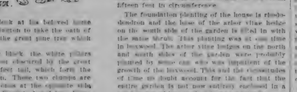
JAMES AND DOLLY MADISON ARRIVE AT "ASH LAWN" (Posed by University of Virginia Students)

"ASH LAWN", JAMES MONROE'S HOME AT CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.

A HALLWAY THROUGH A CORRIDOR AT ASH LAWN



JAMES AND ELIZA MONROE AT "ASH LAWN" (Photos by University of Virginia Students)

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

ASH LAWN, one of the Independence day celebrations throughout the United States this year more is going interesting than that which will take place at Charlottesville, Va. There on July 4 will be celebrated the one hundredth anniversary of the death of James Monroe, fifth President and one of the United States statesmen of the Monroe Doctrine and the last of the Virginia dynasty.

Ash Lawn was the home for 26 years during the most active period of the life of James Monroe, the last of the famous Virginia dynasty. Monroe himself never to have definitely decided on a name for this estate, nevertheless, persistently in Cabot. The term origin and authorship of the name Ash Lawn have been lost. Arnaldo Galland translated those into French between 1808 and 1810 and through between 1808 and the Arabian Nights were introduced to European readers. Although Mohammedan the Arabian Nights are the regarded as belonging to polite literature and those who read them are open to the charge of having a depraved taste.—Fitch-Gaylor Magazine.

Historically the house is most interesting. No one speaks of it as "A house of twenty-six rooms standing." From it he departed in 1817 to be inaugurated fifth President of the United States. He sold it late in 1823, not long before the end of his second term in office. It is located at the eastern foot of Carter's mountain on a rise of ground overlooking the Rivanna river, north-west of Charlottesville and southward Monroe, the first Jefferson's home and the second that of William Short. These three men were friends as well as neighbors, which probably accounts for the proximity of the homes. They are located on three hills of about the same shape, and separated by two miles, across which there is an unobstructed view from one to the other. It is said these neighbors signaled one another across the valley.

Jefferson and Madison, as neighbors, friends and companions of Monroe, often visited Ash Lawn and there discussed subjects of national and international importance.

The first sign of Ash Lawn is a towering Norwegian pine tree, which from afar appears standing high above all the other ancient trees on the hilltop which Jefferson selected at his friend's request as the site for the home which he was planning during the years when he was minister to France.

One verse from the walk road into a beautifully bordered lane winding up to the garden entrance. Here stands the old stone mounting block, worn by many feet in the years when Monroe dispensed hospitality to visiting statesmen and diplomats. One imagines Monroe turning back at this spot for a last look at his beloved home before riding to Washington to take the oath of office. A tall, broad-at the grand pine tree which dominates the entire.

From the mounting block the white pillars of the house are discovered at the great lawn trees, almost to the last, which form the entrance to the garden. There two cluster are found on the lower side of the garden while those of an oval formed by English dwarf box. From this oval opens the walk flanked by double rows of box, leading to the doorway. The garden planned while Monroe was in France during Jeffersons the French influences. When it is remembered that this type of boxwood garden was most favorable conditions only about half an inch a year, the size and beauty of the trees which were the pride of Ash Lawn's original owner is all the more impressive.

The front part of the house was built after Monroe's time but one steps down from the entrance hall into the original house, and at every turn one notes architectural details which characterize the handiwork of Jefferson. Monroe had written from Paris to his friend at Monticello, asking him to choose a site for the home he was to build on his return, specifying that it should be in easy distance of Monticello, and following several minutes there for the house. Here are the small grassed enclosures beside the fireplace such as Jefferson built in his own home, and a graceful archway opening from a small hallway into the side garden.

On the first floor the first floor have been furnished with original Monroe pieces lent by his descendants, a corner cupboard in the long dining room is the oldest piece of Monroe furniture in existence. Monroe's desk, characteristic of the period in its severe simplicity of design, stands in a corner of the library, and on the walls are pictures which Monroe himself selected; watercolor over many states since the time, and were brought back to their original home again.

Here and there are bits of rare old pewter; a spinning wheel, and other relics of Monroe and his friends not about a blazing log fire; a crane—never reflecting the sun which comes in through the windows of French design. Much of the atmosphere of the original home has been restored in the few months since the estate was purchased by the present owner.

In the basement one finds the old kitchen, with the original floors of brick laid in a zigzag pattern, and the heavy doors still perfectly balanced on massive hinges shaped like the letter H. In this kitchen are many of the original iron griddles and kettles, and scarred old wood blocks from the kitchen door a few steps lead to the foundations of the house and the smokehouse where the old Virginia hams were prepared.

Some of Monroe's fellow slave have reluctantly he left his home when he went to the White House in 1817. For seven years of his term as President he used Ash Lawn as a summer White House. He often declared to friends that Ash Lawn would be the last of his plantations to go if he should ever be forced to sell. His brilliant Jefferson, he found himself after a long life of public service, hard pressed to meet his creditors. Finally in 1830 he sold Ash Lawn in order to meet a pressing debt to the Bank of the United States.

Ash Lawn boasts a garden unique in plan and composition of this continent. Originally it was all equal, for it was almost entirely planned and designed by Monroe himself.

The garden is evergreen and is one of the few boxwood gardens in America. The main and south sides are bordered with arbor vitae and high boxwood. The house forms the western boundary; the eastern is a natural hedge. Through the openings in the trees of the orchard, which is on the other side of the drive, the visitors in 1825, the land rolling gently as far as it may be seen.

To one side, the south of the entrance, there extends a row of tall brush box perfectly shaped and planted in all 8 curves of pre-18 cent. This same formation on the other side is not quite complete, but the southern portion is partly missing and is believed to have been destroyed by fire. The narrow boxwood end of the oval is flanked with two large pieces of bush box on each side. From each of these four upright rows of english dwarf box run to the front of the house where the rows are closed by four pieces of the larger sempervirens boxwood.

Between the two inside rows an old brick walk leads from oval to house. This quadruple row of english dwarf box is unique, being known only in foreign gardens.

The original brick walk goes around the left side of the house where there stands a magnificent white ash, one of the largest in the state, fifteen feet in circumference.

The foundation planting of the house is rhododendron and the base of the arbor vitae hedge on the south side of the garden is filled in with the same shrub. This planting was at one time in boxwood. The arbor vitae hedges on the north and south sides of the garden were probably planted by some one who was impatient of the growth of the boxwood. This and the contraction of time no doubt accounts for the fact that the entire garden is not now entirely enclosed in a solid hedge of boxwood as it was originally.

The Independence day celebration at Charlottesville in the absence of the esteemed gentleman in honor of Monroe which has been arranged by the Memorial committees previously referred to. The committee is composed of Charles H. Maltie, head of the institute of public affairs of the University of Virginia and dean of the summer school, who is chairman, and the following members: Hon. Henry L. Stimson, secretary of state; Hon. W. N. Doak, secretary of labor; Hon. Claude A. Swanson, United States senator; Hon. Carter Glass, United States senator; Hon. Samuel D. This commission also had charge of a celebration at Charlottesville on the anniversary of Monroe's death on July 4, when the body of the famous "Lost Statue" of Monroe, a great figure, 12 feet high, carved from a single block of Carrara marble 33 years ago for the Republic of Venezuela, was unveiled in Ash Lawn. The statue was made by Attilio Piccirilli, New York sculptor, by order of President George C. Castro of Venezuela, following a dispute between him and Venezuela in which President George Cleveland intervened nearly the Monroe doctrine. President Cleveland intervened to place the statue before the capitol in Caracas, but before it could be sent to South America a revolution overthrew Crespo's government and he died in jail. Since that time the statue has remained in the sculptor's studio, and it was his ambition that Mr. John discovered and purchased it to be erected at Ash Lawn.

One other long delayed honor came to Monroe this year, a bust of him was one of the four which was unveiled in the hall of fame at New York university last May. He was one of the only Presidents to be thus honored a fact which should all the more honor because of his importance in American history. Monroe has been called one of the most neglected of the Presidents. The following resume of his varied career will indicate what a large life was his from the two years previous to the Revolution down to his death on Independence day just one hundred years ago.

FOOD FOR THE FUSSY

There are grown-ups who are fussy about their food, but sometimes they are hopeless; however with children a firm hand and mental vigilance will successfully weather this. Most of them are naturally inquisitive and hungry after a fairy tale, an incident when it is over. What can you see this method in inducing him to eat the things he should. Every woman should be a good story teller, able to pursue interesting things out of the ordinary. With ready wit pass by half one may see about the same story for even grown ups they get pleasure out of the things that the child will, if presented in a wholesome manner.

A dish of floating island, so good for children who will not eat custards and rather fight, may be presented in a more rich way than the cooked write of eggs on top. It can be a pleasure behind an ordinary with a "nest" to be served as a regular sort of dish. If it is the real custard under base and cream or cheese a bowl of it large cream. The formula will suit his way in being a favor.

Floating Island—This old fashioned dish of our grandmother's may well serve as an entree for it is a wholesome and good as well as pretty. To prepare the custard take three egg yolks, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, a pinch of salt, one pint cornstarch capfuls of scalded milk and when cooled until it coats the spoon add one-half teaspoonful of vanilla to flavor. For the island, beat the whites of the eggs until stiff, add four tablespoonfuls of sugar and drop by spoonfuls on hot water in a shallow pan. Cook until firm or not in the least to brown. Remove the islands to the custard, chill and serve. One grandmother used to make the egg white on top of the custard while it was cooking, thus they connected true and best.

Credits Lower Animals With Power of Thought

Of all the quarrelsome noises of the animal realm, the one which is commonest remained in this "Los Angeles reads them." The answer, according to Stephen Berger, famous son of a lower invertebrates. In 1906 a member of the Russian mission to establish a bank of issue, to discovery of the British navy.

But irregary nonsense there was and a stable monetary system there was. Even banking came in the country prior to the adoption of the Constitution in 1787—on June 17, 1780—as the state-like affair the Pennsylvania bank opened in Philadelphia, supported by about a hundred subscribers and intended chiefly to assist in prosecuting the campaign for Washington's troops. This bank, formed in the business of Thomas Paine, continued only about a year and a half, never wrote the specie basis for it had formed.

The first modern commercial bank in this country was the bank of North America, to which Robert Morris was a leading figure, and which was organized December 31, 1781, and opened its doors on January 7, 1782. In 1785 it entered the national banking system. In view of the subject of the address, it shows among subscribed banks and the organizers to include Mr. Wood "Continental" in its name.

Not Work of One Author

"The Arabian Nights' Entertainments" is merely a collection of ancient Eastern stories, many of which were first collected in their present form about the middle of the Fifteenth century, probably in Cairo. The term origin and authorship of the Arabian Nights have been lost. Arnaldo Galland translated those into French between 1808 and 1810 and through between 1808 and the Arabian Nights were introduced to European readers. Although Mohammedan the Arabian Nights are the regarded as belonging to polite literature and those who read them are open to the charge of having a depraved taste.—Fitch-Gaylor Magazine.

Bank of North America Given Odd Prerogative

There were 3,500 banks having capital there but no commercial banks as we know them. Also it was one that is said to have been established in South Carolina in 1712 by the unadventurer of a group of unknown. No mark is known of this bank and it did not long survive. But Wilhelm Paterson, who afterward promoted the bank of England, is said to have investigated it. When Is Draft Not a Draft? Dr. Hill Tells

Dr. C. Vernon Hill.

"When is a draft not a draft?—that is what a certain person is beseeching to the body, and to others will they cause colds?"

This is a question every home wife ponders whenever she expposes her child or herself to any currents during hot weather. The answer, according to the United Institute of Herbology of Hollywood, Calif., Mrs. Hill, is given in one of the most fascinating systems of medicine ever introduced to the world.

"A draft is a current of air which, by reason of its low temperature, low humidity, or high velocity, or any combination of these factors, removes a greater amount of heat from the part of the body it comes in contact with than the surface of that part normally given off."

This definition was formulated by Dr. E. Vernon Hill, of Chicago, who is both a physician and one of the foremost air conditioning engineers in the country. It means, among other things that if we continue to be used as a method of cooling a room or city by blowing the air which it kept stagnant that we are not in reality cooling it but are only increasing the rate of evaporation of the perspiration from the body.

This principle is followed in the machine of most intelligent prominence these days—the electric fan. It is the simple principle of the use of it is kept moving at such a velocity that it produces a cooling effect upon the workers. The same principle existed not in the Roman baths of Pompeii, nor, can be applied without any difficulty to the cooling of homes during the coming of the hotter hot weather.

In fact, this is the secret behind the modern "Cooperator" heating system. A small electrical generator and motor is installed in the central heating plant and is run on hot days to keep the fresh circulation of the air through all the rooms of the house. Engineers have shown that even though the temperature of the air is not actually reduced by this operation, it does so. Scientifically mechanically, this air motion produces a comfort effect 14 per cent better than that of the same air if it is stagnant.

By this means the engineers of the Holland furnace point out, the warm air circulating heating plant is completed fit for all-year-round air conditioning system. For during the winter the rapid motion of the air passing through the heat generator up to the rooms increases the rapidity with which the home can be warmed and markedly reduces fuel costs by eliminating the need for forcing the heater and by operating with a large volume of moderately warmed air instead of a small volume of super-heated air.

"Christian Science" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, June 28.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright heart. Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous; and give thanks at the remembrance of his holiness" (Ps. 97:11, 12).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Christian Science is dawning upon a material age. The great spiritual facts of being, the rays of light, shine in the darkness, though the shadows, comprehending them not, may deny their reality" (p. 546).

Record Leaf Growth?

A chart-braved water lily of Japan and China annually holds the world's record for speed in leaf-growing according to a note in the British scientific journal Nature. This plant, a relative of the Victoria regia of South America, expands its four-foot floating leaves in less than nine days, increasing their diameter at a rate of nearly a half-inch an hour. At that rate of growth they produce between 25 and 26 square feet of leaf in 60 minutes.

MARION HOWLAND'S DAUGHTER

By FANNIE HURST

WNU Service.

MARION HOWLAND'S boarding house had grown under her capable fingers from a small, exclusive rooming affair in an obscure part of the city, to a twenty-room old mansion that had once belonged to one of the presidents families in the city, she was a woman of no small intelligence and shrewdness, and she felt that she had a certain responsibility that seems to be felt by the social springs of a watering place.

The boarders most contiguously to declare that Marion Howland had given most of a sixth sense to wisdom she could boast, was that one who went looking to Mr. Avery room, a wasp-waisted was looking in Miss Van Antwerp music, the commercial traveler who shuffled his pajamas sock-ward, or that the Vatican summoning had developed a nose.

With all those memories of exhilarating fat boy who Marion Howland was the time being the unconcerned, tactfully. She sober, a good-looking, well-groomed woman, with enough of the milk of human kindness in her composition to temper the bend, and not to overdo the sweetness. Many of the boarders from Mrs. Lowenstein's down to the boarding house hall set her unofficially as the final court of appeals, talked family secrets over with her in moments of anxiety, consulted her on matters of the heart and on matters of the pocketbook. And found her motherly and comforting in both.

Marion Howland had nevertheless set out to marry her small daughter, for the good of as much as possible of the environment of the city, rather than the environment of the country. Not that there was any actual friction between the two women, but Marion's mother was strongly inclined to view the world as carefully as if the wheels had been manufactured by human hands. The car was empty during the exhibition, except for a collection of mail bags, which had been stored there at the Municipal airport here.

"Made to Order" Weather Predicted

St. Louis.—Made to order weather in which the average householder will be able to press a button on supper time and produce a day to suit his whim exactly, or press another button and produce a rainstorm to put out a fire started by Willis H. Carrier, president of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, in a talk to the Electrical Board of Trade of St. Louis recently.

Air conditioning largely perfected to industrial uses and now spouted in theaters, department stores and other places where people congregate, is the method of controlling on the roof of the insurance house occupied by the knowns. Wisps of snow were brought from near and far by the fan-driven home builders, and thus was the case completed.

Early one morning a spark from a chimney ignited the straw in the roof, starting a fire on the roof visible almost a mile away before it was discovered. A second passing the house about 1:30 a. m. saw the flames and aroused the occupants.

Five company No. 7 used chemicals in large quantities and company No. 14 used water, likewise in large quantities, before the fire was extinguished. Considerable damage was done to the roof and to interior furnishings.

The third is best was destroyed.

Inaugurates New Marker System

This odd-looking tower surrounding a servtice station near the municipal airport at Cleveland, Ohio, is the first of a proposed nation-wide system of markers for airplanes with radio beacons. Symbols on the markers indicate the position on a special map. Letters signify degrees of latitude and longitude, and figures, minutes of latitude and longitude. The tower is painted in black and yellow stripes, so the location of the tower system and grid method of marking maps is unique.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

By WALTER TRUMBULL

At a very spirited party given by an actor at his apartment, a good time was had by all. Lots of the guests left at four o'clock in the morning.

Mr. Massie said he realized the money was gone, but that he was glad he was able to receive a cash bag, with Mrs. Mizelle viewed gravely.

Aurrey said the principle of radio guidance which he has perfected holds unlimited possibilities in time of war. He declared that one can could easily control by radio a dozen planes in formation.

A good time took at Tommy Atkins, the veteran soldier! Didn't golf professionals, who own the British open championship over the customary seventy-two holes, have to undergo a rigid physical examination before they were allowed to enter the competition? Undoubtedly. And they'd have to pass the examination with flying colors, too, or they'd be ordered to the sidelines. Tommy Atkins is the champion.

Bird's Nest Is Blamed for Fire in a Home

Atlanta, Ga.—Birds, intent on building a comfortable nest, attained horrid fame at 71 St. Charles avenue, northeast.

USELESS GIFTS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

We are very much addicted at our house to the giving of useless gifts. Christmas is coming on and we are already trying to decide what we shall give each other. Usually something pretty, something ornamental, something purely personal or something by which we can say we generally try to choose the letter or the gift that is as practical as the woman, who gave Lord Dundreary the wooden earrains but I do try to choose something that is useful and something that I think I should very much like myself if I were in her place.

No one appreciates the useless gift. One hundred and fifty years ago George Rogers Clark with a little band of men set out to conquer the Northwest for the newly established nation. The hardships of his expedition have hardly been realized. He had to march through the wilderness ranging from 1,000 to 3,000 feet. When the two planes landed Owen said that one time he had thrown the switch, disconnecting the radio current, and took control of the plane himself when Aurrey by accident "overcontrolled" it. Aurrey explained that an aviator was gulled largely by a sense of touch in operating a plane, and that Aurrey, flying the ship by radio control, had only his eyes to guide him in determining whether he was banking too sharply.

Aurrey said the principle of radio guidance which he has perfected holds unlimited possibilities in time of war. He declared that one can could easily control by radio a dozen planes in formation.

"Made to Order" Weather Predicted

St. Louis.—Made to order weather in which the average householder will be able to press a button on supper time and produce a day to suit his whim exactly, or press another button and produce a rainstorm to put out a fire started by Willis H. Carrier, president of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers, in a talk to the Electrical Board of Trade of St. Louis recently.

Air conditioning largely perfected to industrial uses and now spouted in theaters, department stores and other places where people congregate, is the method of controlling on the roof of the insurance house occupied by the knowns. Wisps of straw were brought from near and far by the fan-driven home builders, and thus was the nest completed.

VACATION TIME HINTS

Its vacation time again, which means a short period for a much deserved respite from the routine cares and worries of everyday workaday life, and a longer period of unbounded joy for the children with school sessions at an end and no further concern on that score for more than two months. With all its manifold joys however, vacation time brings its problems and a few dangers if watchfulness and a little parental care is not exercised.

The dangers lie in the fact that with restraint removed from prescribed and obligatory duties that the uninitiated and newary, used to the service rendered by public health organizations in the cities and by all the improvements that modern industry has brought to their front doors, may not be attuned to the different conditions that the country presents.

In view of these less controlled conditions it might be useful to present some of the hints offered to parents by the children's bureau of the United States Department of Labor for their consideration during vacation time. "Make sure" cautions the department, "that you spend your vacation in a house that is clean and well screened, and that the milk and water are safe. Do not let the children drink from dirty roadside springs. See that they drink three or four glasses of cool, unflavored water daily. Fresh fruit orangeade and lemonade and tomato juice may be given also in moderation, but ten and coffee and some bottled drinks contain a stimulant which children should not have.

"Use no raw milk. If pasteurized milk is not obtainable, boil the raw milk. Do not buy food for children from street carts or from counters where it has been exposed to dirt, dust and flies. Give the children plenty of fresh, green, leafy vegetables and ripe, fresh fruits. Every child should be outdoors for from five to six hours daily, except on rainy or very windy days."

Those who irk under restraint, as an enemy of the joy of living, would do well to realize that a reasonable amount of informed self-control is in reality a real friend to our greater happiness.

LIGHTENING FARM TAXES

John A. Vomacka, Minnesota farmer, wrote his representative in Washington recently: "I pay $306 in taxes on my 268-acre farm. At the present price of farm products I am compelled to purchase my farm from the county treasurer once every nine years. In addition I must keep the buildings in repair and insured. I am not really sure whether I am an owner or just a tenant. Think it over and see if you can figure out what the future has in store for us."

John Vomacka's problem is not much different from any other farmer's says Editor Tom Cathcart of the Country Home. The tax burden is becoming unbearably heavy to many, and next year's tax will undoubtedly be larger. How can the farmer's load be lightened.

Of late years, Federal State and local governments have been emulating each other in constantly increasing expenditure. Mr. Cathcart believes that the time has come to turn the tide in the opposite direction, and insist upon reduced expenditures and reduced taxes.

"For example," he says, "the Government can and should stop wasting hundreds of millions through Farm Board purchases of wheat and cotton. It can and should put a reasonable limit on gifts to veterans. It can and should be thrifty in countless other ways with the taxpayers' money."

But with all this Federal lavishness, it is probably the State and local taxes that the farmer feels most. In many places farmers pay two dollars to three dollars an acre on farm land worth no more than $50 an acre. This is too much, no matter what the price of farm crops is.

Local farm organizations during the coming year are preparing to campaign vigorously against all tax-eating, inefficient duplications in local Government. They will assert that there are too many officials, too many unnecessary units. Probably there are too many counties, too many townships, too many boards and districts. Recently Professor Leland of the University of Chicago estimated that there are 500,000 separate Government units within the United States all levying and consuming taxes.

"POLITICALLY PRACTICABLE"

How much money is now involved in the liquor business no one knows accurately. The Association Against Prohibition Amendment estimates that the bill was $2,848,000,000 in 1929. Whether or not the estimate is correct in detail, the bootleg traffic unquestionably does a volume of business which must be measured in hundreds of millions.

This business pays tribute, and an immense tribute to politicians, but it pays no taxes.

Legislators worried with problems of finding money to pay the increasing cost of government are looking hungrily at the liquor business. Michigan, as already pointed out in Collier's, is showing them one way to get some of this money.

Michigan is taxing the raw materials out of which home brew and bootleg beer are made.

This method of legally recognizing the illegal liquor trade is obviously not the same, honorable and statesmanlike way of dealing with the failure of prohibition. It is, however, politically practicable. Tacitly the Michigan legislature has acknowledged the existence of the liquor traffic and has imposed a tax upon it.

The sensible and decent course is to admit the existing facts and to deal frankly with them. This implies the revision of the Eighteenth Amendment so that the federal government, the states and local governments may regulate and control a business now and long conducted in defiance of law.—Collier's Weekly.

UNEASY LIES THE HEAD

During the past twelve years the general attitude toward the Presidency of the United States has suffered a change which, if continued will eventually affect the quality of man willing to undertake the leadership of the country.

Until the second term of President Wilson most presidents had been immune to personal attack. The precedency stood for something which should not be destroyed. It was like the flag, the symbol of Government. The office was to be respected and held aloof from disparagement.

Mary Roberts Rinehart calls attention to the fact that this immunity of the office ceased with President Wilson. She writes forcibly and fearlessly regarding the resultant situation in a provocative article in the American Magazine. "The new use of a President as a whipping boy by his political enemies is dangerous", she asserts. "Deliberate attempts are made to ruin him; mentally if the party may be destroyed with him. Why is this dangerous? Because respect for the presidential office is a part of the respect for all Government, and when a hostile Senate plays an inflammatory portion of the press deliberately belittles the one, it undermines the other."

No President goes into office to destroy the country. Practical politics, personal ambition, and idealism alike dictate that he shall give the nation the best that is in him. He may appeal to the popular mind or he may not. Probably not, for there is no time in the office today for showmanship.

The presidential job, under the most favorable conditions, is a burden few men have the temperament and physique to stand without breaking. Its worst is a man-killing position, stultifying to pride as well as to effort, and increasingly difficult to administer.

Perhaps it needs reorganizing. As things are, it will be difficult as time goes on to secure men physically and mentally able to carry it. Certainly it needs whole-hearted public support, and there should surely be a restoration of the dignity of the office and its immunity from attack.

WHAT KILLED IDA?

When Ida, the famous ostrich of the London zoo, passed away some time ago, to the grief of all who knew her, there was much speculation as to the cause of her untimely death. To try to determine the matter, a post mortem examination was held, according to the Associated Press which reports that the following assortment was found in her ample gizzard:—

"Two women's handkerchiefs, a man's handkerchief, three gloves, three feet of cord, an empty film spool, a four-inch nail, an eight-inch pencil, four half-pennies, two farthings and a French coin, part of a celluloid comb, part of a rolled gold necklace, a collar button, a bicycle tire valve, a brass wmnirg key for an alarm clock, a dozen bits of wire, metal staples, screws, small nails and copper rivets, glove fastener and a piece of wood four inches long."

The dispatch did not disclose just what the verdict was, but a mere layman might venture the thought that Ida had suffered from some thing akin to indigestion.—Burr Oak Acorn.

LOOK OUT FOR FOREST FIRES

Governor Meier of Oregon, in warning his state that it faces an unusual forest fire hazard, said that all but 23 per cent of forest fires are caused by human agencies. In other words, 77 out of every 100 fires are the result of human carelessness and indifference—or malice.

The situation in Oregon is not greatly different from that in many other states and the Governor's warning has national significance. We talk, un the one hand, about forest preservation —and, on the other, we make it possible for thousands of acres of grown or growing timber to be devastated in the course of a few hours.

The summer and fall seasons immensely increase the seriousness of the forest fire problem. The careless smoker and builder of campfires constitute a tremendous hazard to our timber areas—to say nothing of the arsonist, who is always busy. Every public and private facility should be given to forest protection—and every individual should do his bit in cooperating in the good work.

AIMEE McPHERSON'S INCOME

The California evangelist, Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson, had an income of $169,376 in three years on which she should have paid more than $21,000 taxes, but the Government only received $544 from her.

Mrs. McPherson denies that she owes the money to Uncle Sam, but the government has heard about Mrs. McPherson's denials before, and remains unimpressed. The courts will decide.

DUAL BANK SYSTEM FAVORED BY BANKER

State and National Institutions Supplement Each Other in Serving Country's Varied Financial Needs

RECENT suggestions that all banks be put on a United States or some other federal jurisdiction, doing away with the chartering of banks by the various states recalls the opposition to this plan presented at the recent convention of the American Bankers Association by R. S. Hecht of New Orleans, Chairman of its Economic Policy Commission. Mr. Hecht said:

"There are just as good reasons why there should be state as well as national banks. As that there should be state as well as a national government. I do not think that analogy is far fetched. The states should not surrender all political jurisdiction to the central government, and the local business life of the states should not be made to surrender all control over financial facilities to national financial institutions. There have been many instances of business conditions from state to state where there are varying local requirements of the various states.

"It is entirely logical, therefore, that the states should retain the right to charter banks so as to mold and direct their affairs in accordance with the states' governmental and business requirements and keep their business entirely localized sentiment and confidence.

"The argument is sometimes advanced that the dual system is responsible for the failure of the federal reserve system to function properly. There is a large group of banks that are free to choose membership in the federal reserve system. Facts and figures prove that this is a specious argument.

"The membership of banks has been shifting from national to state charters. Several years ago the state banks at large national banks with banks operating under state charters. However, the Federal Reserve System was not organized in this manner. Massachusetts, which rendered unbroken the control of trust assets acquired by a national bank through a merger with a state bank, is was a real advantage for national banks asserted to take out and operate under a state charter, either on a temporary or a permanent basis, as circumstances make expedient.

"In my opinion, bankers, as well as state, should combat the thought that conceives of depriving them of the vitalizing benefits of our dual system."

Finance Fights Erosion

Farm terracing to stop erosion is of major importance in Noble County, Oklahoma, the county agent said, and as one of the county's national banks bought five farm levels to be loaned to farmers without charge. The machines were immediately put to use and the farmers are showing keen interest in terracing. Two terracing schools were started for adults and 4-H Club boys.

Banking Systems Help Each Other

"Reciprocally the state and national banks systems have helped each other. If the national banking law has served in some respects as something of a model code toward which state banking laws more and more have approached year by year, so have the state codes developed valuable reforms which have suggested improvements for the national laws. A great many unfortunate competitive inequalities have been wiped out by this mutual evolutionary process and further progress along the line of uniformity as far as desirable is anticipated.

"However, I do not believe that it is a disadvantage to have two banking codes from which to choose reports. It is quite probable that the state banking code in many instances represents a closer adjustment to local conditions than could be had under the national banking laws, and this is a situation that should be retained. There should, however, not be competition between the two banking codes. Competition should be between banks themselves and not between the laws under which they operate. The effort to offer too great advantages in one code as against the other could lead only to evil results. But I do not think that there should be the alternative opportunities that now exist, which banking institutions and local business interests may choose, so that they can function between their business relationships under that banking code which best meets the conditions of the times and of the place as they see them.

"This has been illustrated in both directions. In states where such opposition to the guarantee of deposits were operative state banks had the opportunity to escape the baleful effect of such laws. On the other hand, when a court decision was handed down in Worcester, Massachusetts, which rendered uncertain the conditions of trust assets acquired by a national bank through a merger with a state bank, it was a real advantage for national banks asserted to take out and operate under a state charter, either on a temporary or a permanent basis, as circumstances make expedient.

"In my opinion, bankers, as well as state, should combat the thought that conceives of depriving them of the vitalizing benefits of our dual system."

VITAMINS AND VAPOR INVISIBLE HEALTH PROTECTORS

VAPOR IN HOME PROTECTS HEALTH

Epidemics of Winter Ailments Laid to Dearth of Moisture Indoors.

SO IMPORTANT are the vitamins to human development, health and happiness that they have become known as life's invisible necessities. Without an ample supply of the various vitamins, foods would be unable to meet the body's requirements. Among the serious ailments which result from lack of vitamins are rickets, eye diseases, stunted growth, indigestion, scurvy, beri-beri and sterility. Science has proved that certain of the vitamins are essential to illness prevention and also to the cure of disease.

Equally important to life is another invisible protector—adequate supply of humidity (water vapor) in the air. Without air moisture, health-producing sunshine, even in the tropical regions, points out the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich., the air contains a fair percentage of moisture. In fact, says the Institute, there is more moisture in desert air than in the air in most American homes during the heating season.

The dearth of moisture in home air during winter is ably assisted by the drying out of furniture and interior woodwork by the building of home owners to keep plants and flowers for any length of time. And, explains the Institute, it is chiefly reflected in the epidemics of colds and other respiratory diseases that afflict the American public every fall and winter.

Between these diseases become epidemic with the commencement and progress of the heating season, health authorities and air-conditioning experts are of the opinion that the extremely dry air in American homes and places of work is a contributing factor of no least importance. They point out that lack of sufficient atmospheric moisture dries out and causes irritation of the delicate membranes of the respiratory organs, and because germs fall opportunity to cause lodging in the system when it finds in such common afflictions as colds, influenza, pneumonia, sinus infections bronchitis and other winter ailments.

An ample supply of water vapor in the house air during winter is now economically and automatically supplied by heating systems of the vapor air type. These are equipped with a humidifier which has an automatic control to shut off the flow of the vapor from 35 gallons of water per day. This amount may be required, however, only in large residences in modern homes of five or six rooms, evaporation of from one to eight gallons of water per day is necessary. This will prove ample to preserve health and make house-keeping more comfortable at moderate temperatures.

GRANGE HONORS CLUB CHAMPS

Saturday night, June 27th, was a gala night for the Boys of surrounding 4-H Club Members in the County. At this time the County Poultry Champions and Champions and awarded an Achievement Badge to each one.

Over 100 of the boys and girls gave short talks on their club activities and what the club program meant to them. The boys of recognition from the Pomona Grange of Charlevoix County was greatly appreciated and the boys and girls showed that it is an community noted by the parents and friends of club members.

The Highest Scoring Boy and Girl showed upon any one club member is that of being selected as the All Around County Champion, and at the closing feature of our program this honor was extended to Carleton Smith of Charlevoix. Congratulations, Carleton, upon this our highest award and may you have many more years of 4-H club activity. The other county champions were awarded as follows:

Clothing, Christina Withers, Charlevoix.

Handicraft, Norman Zitka, East Jordan.

Style, Catherine Richardson, Charlevoix.

Canning, Martha Riedel, Boyne City.

Bean, Robert Brandsteen, Bay Shore.

Dairy, Carleton Smith, Charlevoix.

Many persons who have tried this method of inducing sleep declare that the vibration of the engines is soothing in its effect. Instead of counting sheep jump the engine room grilles.

Authors Who Despised Books

While it is natural to assume that all authors are devoted readers and advocate reading for others, it is pointed out that de Maupassant said books "made me narrow, they misrepresented life, indulged in deception and gave me blind false viewpoints" and Boileau declared that he "hated books; they teach people to talk about things they do not understand." Further, Emile Zola compared authors in general to "sausagemakers who prepare their stuff for others while absolutely not eating one themselves."

$500,000,000 LOSS TO U.S. INDUSTRY FROM COLDS

DRY HEAT DRAINS WORKERS' HEALTH

Urge Air-Conditioning to Combat Development of Respiratory Disease Epidemics.

AN IMMENSE fortune is lost by American workers each year because of colds and other respiratory diseases, according to the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich., there is an average loss of seven and one-half days every year lost by every person gratefully employed because of common colds alone. The Institute conservatively estimates the loss in wages caused by colds alone at $500,000,000 annually. This, of course, does not include the heavy losses incident to influenza, pneumonia, the flu, and pneumonia.

It is to be noted, colds and other respiratory diseases usually increase epidemic with the commencement of the annual heating season and reach their highest point in the cold months of January and February. Because of the importance of these epidemics to the welfare of whole cities, and the consensus of authorities that the excessive heating of American homes and places of work, and the almost utter absence of moisture in indoor air constitute a contributing factor of mighty importance to the inducement and development of respiratory disease epidemics.

The reason may be ascribed for the lack of moisture in the home air (he is the natural preservative of the body air does not have the capacity for, but does it contain as much moisture in the winter as it does in the summer) is that all vital water formerly found in the home air is now absorbed by the many furnaces, with which most homes are heated, not only supply too much heat, but also are not properly equipped to supply sufficient moisture to counteract the dryness of winter air. The water pans in old style furnaces and the old-fashioned humidifiers for attachment to radiators have proved wholly inadequate. Heating and air-conditioning experts affiliated with the heating and ventilating industry have perfected and built into modern warm air heating systems humidifiers of ample capacity to meet all home requirements. These humidifiers are of several designs. They receive their water supply direct from the home water mains and have ample capacity for evaporating and injecting into the home air the water vapor from as much as 25 gallons of water per day.

These systems of the vapor air type are also endowed with an automatically operated air propeller unit which uniformly distributes the warmed and humidified air from the heater into every room of the home.

Experience has proved that where indoor air has extremely low moisture content, the home is more uncomfortable, more healthful, and conducive to colds and other respiratory infections.

BASEMENT AIR NOT UNHEALTHFUL

Basement air is not "bad" air. It is as fit for breathing as is air in other rooms of a building, say the editors of the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich. Though the basement air may seem damp, it is not indicative of an unhealthful condition. Dampness is due to moisture, and is easily explained.

The warm air of summer contains considerable moisture. Because of the coolness of the basement persons are more sensitive to the large amount of moisture in it, and the coolness is further aggravated by lack of ventilation.

If basements are unhealthful, it is because they are kept closed and not ventilated during the summer. Intentional evaporation represents a large share of the moisture, and the old-time proplastic birth of cesspools, cellars, damp and ground fed one of this valuable asset.

The fine, damp-proof foundations and tight windows that characterize basements with tiled, and sometimes effective heating systems, make one of the basement for any economical purpose. In many modern homes the heating apparatus of the upper air does not heat the basement, and in some cases pellet sent are necessary. In any case, the basement can be used regularly and most beneficially if it is kept clean and ventilated.

The exercise of ordinary care in keeping the basement clean and in order, and in discouraging the idea that basement space is the catchall for all kinds of dangerous stuff, will remove prejudices almost not present fact and "basement air" will be

Entranced by Strains of "Pistol" Calliope

That bread of the circus, the calliope, made its first public appearance in Lansing, screaming "Hail the Conquering Hero Comes" from the Worcester & Nashua railroad.

A contemporary account describes the effect as "magical; one wonder after another." Farmers left their workshops and rushed for the field. Women and children swarmed like ants when their antihill is trod on, again with wonder and delight. The horses danced pirouettes to the music; the very pigs relaxed the tension of their tortures to a contented grunt. . . . snuffed the summer air their pensive tails outstanding straight bolted.

"Twas marvelous, and we should not have been surprised if all the bending woods, charmed by the Orphic strains, had walked minus the attached hills and made obeisance to the Calliope . . . even as Orpheus wood came down to Thessaly."

tion of the laws of a well planned meal is to see that several foods of the same nature do not appear in the same menu. Whom serving a fruit cocktail the entire menu should be considered, as other fruits should not appear in the same meal.

Ceylon Tomato Salad.—Peel three solid tomatoes, cut them into halves and press out the seeds. Chop the tomatoes and put into a bowl, add a tablespoonful of onion juice, a teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of onion juice, half the grains of green pepper, with half a teaspoonful of paprika. Mix and turn into the dish in which it is to be served. Serve with four tablespoonfuls of cooked cream. Cream of tartar solidified in normal cream by grating a good-sized nut and pouring the water over it. Wash and stir until all the flavor has been washed from the flour, then grate into a sauce and drain, turn into a cheese cloth to strain. Let the milk thus obtained stand over night to the cream will form on the surface. Remove this and use for the cream. It is well to remember that a wet sifter clotting can not be used, if there is a hole in the sifter it will fail to measure very fast, will run out of this until little difficulty.

Italian Cheese.—Take one pound of lean beef, finely minced, add of half a liver, one-half pound of lean, one pound of the tenderloin of of sage, two teaspoonfuls of chopped parsley, one-fourth of an of gelatin, two teaspoonfuls of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and a dash of cayenne. Grease the liver with butter and let stand five minutes then dredge over flour. Chop the liver and the other meats all raw, add the seasonings together with one grated onion. Mix well, and grease a mold, press the meat into it, packing well, cover and shake three hours. Remove the cover, pour off the broth, adding the gelatin to the broth, reserve it to the broth and let stand in cold water for an hour or more.

How English Merchant of 1480 Sought Custom

One of the earliest posters ever printed in England is to be seen in the British library, and concerns a Surrey service book, printed in 1480 by Caxton. It reads as follows: "If it pleases any man spiritual or temporel to bye any pyes of Twys or Thyrs, commaundyng at Salesbrof Use, enquyred after the Pyes of this prynted whereat, and they shall fynde at the reverse that no great cowrd was ne dare be without the feld every scrow, enacted swiftly and without Oxenardyne.

Mannalled to two other youths due to stand trial he was taken to the court house where he was arraigned before Judge Louis S. Cox.

At the conclusion of the reading of the indictment the clerk called upon Nobile to plead, and the defendant, replying in calm, clear voice, said, "I plead guilty to murder in the second degree."

Plea is Accepted.

His attorney, Mr. McCormick, rose and said, "Your honor, I approve of his plea and respectfully request the court to accept it." District Attorney Craig then addressed the court.

"May it please your honor," he said "never in my experience have I been called upon to make such a serious declaration. Mrs. Ellis was a widow, thirty-three years old, living in Haverhill and she enjoyed a splendid reputation. Nobile entered her home, went to her room, and struck her with a hammer three time and end her death. He went there with the intent of committing larceny. Judge Cox passed for a moment and then announced that he would immediately submit for sentence and the judge proceeded to impose the following sentence:

"I have no hesitation in the matter—life imprisonment," he said simply.

Life Sentence Is Given Boy Killer

17-Year-Old Student Lapses From Model Youth to Brutal Murderer.

Haverhill, Mass.—Russell B. Noble, seventeen-year-old high school student who lapsed overnight from a "model" way of life to become a housebreaker who did not balk at murder, has been lodged in solitary confinement at the state prison at Charlestown on a life term sentence for the murder of Mrs. Clara E. G. Ellis, wealthy Haverhill widow, last February.

Noble's entry as a "lifer" into the gray-walled institution came as the climax in a swiftly moving series of events set in motion when the youthful defendant, suddenly abandoning his plan of confessing the state's case, appeared in Superior court as his own advocate and calmly pleaded guilty to second degree murder.

The plea being acceptable both to the court and to District Attorney Hugh C. Craig, Noble was given the sentence prescribed by the law, life imprisonment at Charlestown.

Only One Younger.

The cool, self-possessed youth whose boyish face, curving waves of brown hair and air of unconcern, reminded with him throughout the court proceedings and until some minutes after the gates of state prison had clanged behind him, entered the courtroom over which the youngest person ever committed there as a life sentence.

Among the thousands of men sentenced to life terms at the state prison only the notorious Jesse Pomeroy was younger than Noble at the time of commitment. Pomeroy was but fifteen years old when he was sentenced to death and later received a commutation to life imprisonment. He was just over sixteen when committed while Noble is 6 and one-half feet over half years old.

Evidently intent on preserving his cool poise to the end, Noble, being called to an officer of the Lawrence jail, smiled warily as he was helped up the steps of the prison and passed within the door to the outer office. A few minutes later, his smile and chat of affability unmistakably deserted him when a prison officer, swiftly leafing through the usual questions for new comers, asked him about his mother and father, both of whom are dead.

Guilty Plea a Surprise.

Tears welled up in his eyes and he was unable to answer immediately but after being allowed to sit down for a while he was able to submit once more to the interrogation.

The plea of guilty to second degree murder by Noble came as a distinct surprise to all except a few officials and friends. It came as a shock to a great number of supporters of the youth who had maintained faith in his innocence notwithstanding the alleged confession to the murder alleged to have been made to officers after his arrest and later repudiated.

Announcement that he would appear for arraignment was made a few hours before the opening of the court, and the result that no great crowd was on hand to witness the brief court scene, enacted swiftly and without dramatics.

NEW TREATMENT TO BANISH RICKETS, DOCTOR'S CLAIM

Milk From Cows Fed Irradiated Food Just Over Preventive but Cure.

Philadelphia.—That rickets, a bone disease affecting more than 50 per cent of all infants, can be banished by using milk from cows fed foods irradiated with ultraviolet rays, was the announcement made by Dr. Alfred F. Hess of New York, an international authority, before the American Medical association here.

Doctor Hess, for many years clinical professor of diseases of children at the University and Bellevue hospital medical college, told of the recent experiments with one hundred babies conducted by himself and his associates—Dr. J. M. Lewis and Dr. F. L. Marfield, both of New York and Dr. B. H. Thomas of Iowa State college —whereby it was conclusively proven that rickets can be not only prevented but cured by the process of eating the milk produced by cows which have received a special ration part of which was irradiated with ultraviolet rays.

This discovery and announcement is important, Doctor Hess explains, because it points the way to the extermination of rickets on a large scale; that is, from the public health standpoint rather than through the individual. The chief difficulty with present methods of treating rickets is that they require the close cooperation of the mother and the physician in each individual case. If by the simple process of using milk from cows fed irradiated feed, infants and young children can be systematically freed from rickets at Doctor Hess' demonstrations indicate, a big advance has been made in the elimination of this bone disease which is so widely prevalent in the United States.

"Rickets is the most common nutritional disorder of infants in the temperate zone," says Doctor Hess. "Although it has decreased in incidence and severity it is still true that more than 50 per cent of infants suffer from this disorder to a greater or less degree. There are various remedies available for the prevention or cure of rickets, for example vitamized, cod liver oil, milk treated with ultraviolet rays and direct exposure of the infant to these rays. The main objection to all these agents is that they require the co-operation of the mother; some likewise are difficult to give, expensive or time consuming."

French Medical Academy Asks for More Monkeys

London's Criminal Elite Are Now Listed in Book

London.—The murderers of tomorrow will mark from the death cell until the gallows and then into crime's "Who's Who" the first issue of which has appeared here.

The little book contains a classified review of the major crimes in Great Britain during 1930, and aims as an innovation to a nation that has for years merely hanged slayers and forgot about them.

The author, Robert Curran, in a preface describes it as "The Crime Annual for 1930—the forerunner, it is to be hoped of many such volumes." Scotland Yard, however, it is learned, believes the literary world would survive if the material for the 1931 issue weren't available.

The maritime gun murders in United States' gangdom are always the subject of front page interest here, as are the sporadic killings in the various parts of England.

The book reviews all visitations of the law, even blackmail to murder, and includes the failure of the Henry companies in which millions of investors lost heavily. The convict who leaped to death over a prison wall rather than face "the rope" (the knell) gets a place in posterity.

Forest Air Patrol Need Special Planes for Work

Washington.—Forest air patrol planes can be made more efficient if they are specially designed for such work, according to Howard R. Flint, senior inspector of the Northern Rocky mountain region, Department of Agriculture. Speed according to Flint, is not important, but ease of the load and control are recommended by the annual report on the work of the air service, submitted today to the department report.

Flint would have a plane that could be landed on small fields in the west. The inspector would be started on all patrol flights from one of these small fields in a plane that would be capable of taking off with a load of from 800 to 1,000 pounds in not to exceed 1,000 feet. It would have a cruising range of six hours and a maximum speed in the plane's design of 100 miles per hour. The plane would have the necessary load capacity to carry two inspectors, emergency rations, and a sleeping bag in the plane's cabin.

Flint also would have the plane equipped to accommodate aerial surveying cameras and would have it powered by the latest type 300 horse power motor.

Buffalo Coming Back But on Alaska Range

Washington.—Buffalo which, once swept in vast herds across the western plains now promise to number their lost numbers in a distant range in the wilderness of Alaska.

A small band of buffalo transferred from the national survey's Montana game range in 1928 is reported to have increased in a herd of 23 near a hatchery of the American Game association. Their new home is in a grassy region southeast of Fairbanks.

Homes of Cave Dwellers Are Unearthed in China

Peiping.—Twelve hundred cave dwellings were discovered in Honan province, according to reports received here. Several deep pits containing bones and earthenware were excavated. They confirm the statement of Mencius, the Chinese philosopher, that early Chinese people "made pools for themselves in the highlands and in the lowlands they made caves."

LIVE STOCK

GUINEA PIG AID TO SCIENTISTS

Of Especial Interest to Live Stock Breeders.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

It may be possible some day for the live stock producer to breed his animals to such a way as to speed up the growth of their offspring. Scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture have accomplished this with guinea pigs and believe the same principles may apply to live stock.

Dr. Hugh C. McPhee, geneticist of the bureau of animal industry, and his associates observed that inbreeding and cross-breeding of guinea pigs created a marked influence on the rapidity or shortness of the offspring's growth. They are starting now to ascertain to just these scientific principles can be applied to the live stock specials swine, sheep, and cattle.

If the bureau's breeder could influence the rate of growth of the young from animals as has been done with guinea pigs he would have control of the period of gestation, or the number of months. It is pointed out that rapid growth is economical.

The Government scientists explain further results in crop breeding by measures of correlated factors of growth. Experiments are now being thoroughly tabbed. Wiens took parents were members of lightweight families and the offspring grew faster and heavier than either parent at the same age. When one parent was a lightweight and the other a heavyweight the offspring grew more rapidly than either, heavyweight parent, gaining especially fast, in view this matter was the heavyweight. The offspring of parents showing an advantage of growth in crossing two heavyweight families did not improve the fertility of the offspring. The heaviest family of inbred guinea pigs developed all others during their first four months.

Three Cattle Problems on Feeding Discussed

Three questions of great importance to cattle feeders are discussed in a new bulletin just issued by the Minnesota agricultural experiment station. These questions involve the grinding of shelled corn, barley and alfalfa hay; the feeding of cattle in dry lot, and the value of pasturage as compared to dry-lot feeding.

Among the principal conclusions are the following:

When fattening cattle are being fed a ration of shelled corn and alfalfa hay, both feeds of fair quality and huge are following the cattle as much, while advantage is to be gained by grinding either the corn or the alfalfa or by grinding both and mixing before feeding.

When a suitable ration of available feeds is being fed in fattening cattle, under conditions prevailing in Minnesota, the use of either small or large amounts of silage in the ration has little effect upon the daily rate of gain and makes no lower the margin of profit over feed cost rather than to raise it.

Timothy or timothy and alsike clover mixed hay, grown on properly fertilized land, will be palatable to cattle and show a feeding value equal or superior to similar hay grown on normal inland soil.

Copies of the bulletin may be had free by writing the Mailing Room, Publications Distr. St. Paul and requesting Bulletin 278.

Live Stock Notes

Sheep require no fertile indoor pasture they do not injure the soil by their work.

The pen with a slow habbee or mule and a fast one together—match your beasts for better work.

If you are to raise a number of live stock profitably, you must grow an adequate of feed.

More than 33 per cent of the pigs farrowed in the United states are less than two weeks in settlement.

One of the worst troubles in controlling tuberculosis from tuberculosis is the overcrowding.

Pigs can not live coarse and wisely to be eaten well when fed as roughage are readily eaten as silage.

Four to six weeks before lambing it is a good practice to begin feeding grain to ewes.

As soon as pigs begin to eat protein feeding should be started.

When sheep are ranged over the farm to gather waste crops their cost of production is low.

Pasture alone should not be depended upon to supply all the protein when hogs are fed liberally of forage crops.

Hogs on good alfalfa, clover or rape pastures will require less commercial protein feed than those fed in dry lots.

Small areas near the farmstead can usually be used to good advantage in providing an abundance of excellent cheap feed for hogs.

Now's milk is even richer in bone and muscle building material than cow's milk, and that is one reason why young pigs grow so exceedingly fast.

It is not difficult to get wide good forage for swine. Alfalfa, rape, red clover, sudan grass, and bluegrass when in prime condition, are all good forage crops for swine.

Kill Queen Ant to Get Rid of Pests

Poison Is Suggested to Kill Off Whole Army.

The best way to get rid of ants is to find their nests and to destroy the queen, according to Prof. Glenn W. Herrick of the New York State College of Agriculture. With the queen killed, no more eggs will be laid and the production of the worker ants stops.

Carbon disulphide kills the queen and gets rid of the workers. It may be difficult to find the nest, and sometimes when the nest is found it is hard to get at, as in the foundation walls. When the colony is located, however, four to ounce or two of the liquid into each of several holes made in the nest with a sharpened stick, and then quickly stop up each hole with a clod of dirt. A heavy wet blanket thrown over the nest helps to retain the gas and to make fumigation more effective. The liquid evaporates quickly and the gas permeates the whole nest destroying the colony. Carbon disulphide is highly inflammable and explosive and no fire should be brought near the place while it is being fumigated.

Professor Herrick also recommends the use of bitter candie. To make this, use bitter cocoa with saturated borax as the base of one part to twenty parts of sweet. If some of this mixture, prepared into individual bait, be placed in the places where the ants are frequenting, the insects may be given away.

Every Farm Yard Loses Much Needed Fertility

Every farm yard has fertility going to waste, if one is lucky it may be much. Every piece of manufactured fertilizer in the source of fertility if it is properly saved. Every bit of vegetable matter left over or not used in the preparation of food, or food would make the garden grow greener in the garden or the lawn grow thicker, to the advantage of growth in crowding two bare weeds or bushes, but the greater the fertility of the offspring. The heaviest family of inbred guinea pigs developed all others during their first four months.

Double cropping should begin early and continue late.

Produce is a commodity sound but can no go dropped some under as "produce."

Bookkeeping is calculated for cities and all quarters pursuits, and even in small towns, without danger of missing.

Orchid grass is one of the hardier plants to show growth in spring and it grows well during warmth in the fall.

High-producing cows frequently suffer a severe setback on their dietary reserves, and need to have that reserve replenished.

Thousands of elderberry, currant, and gooseberry bushes are waiting on the job of providing fruit because they are not given an annual pruning to rid out the bearing wood.

Heavy pastoring over long periods readily shows that the reliance to grass production is not unlimited and that feeding value of the feed is reduced.

Cherry leaf spot is the most important single disease of the sour cherry. It is caused by a fungus which passes the winter in the dead leaves on the orchard.

Late blight of potatoes can be prevented by frequent and thorough spraying with bordeaux mixture. Spraying extremely hot weather the lime content of the spray should be increased to ten pounds in 100 gallons of solution.

Unique Way to Prevent Injury to Grape Crop

Perhaps the least way to avoid injury to grapes from late crops of spraying the grapes and is possibly the grapes in the spraying stage with old pomegrapes or injuries. Following, of course, the grapes should be sprayed promptly when the crop is ripe. If for any reason the grape for any reason be delayed in the crop and become over-ripe, much injury is likely to occur from rains.

BEAVER ISLAND NEWS

The steamer "Fred W. Green", under Captain John Rosen, made this port July the 4th.

Captain Rosen knows practically every family on the Island, and, when word was received of his passing, all gathered to give him a reception. The Island played for his musical benefit.

Captain Rosen says he fails to see why any captain should hesitate to make this port, as it is one of the best ports on the lakes to get in and out of.

The S. S. Green was formerly an unassuming boat.

Mr. and Mrs. F. McKinnon and daughter of Boyne City, Mr. James Burns of Roscom, Mich., Mr. Dan McCauley and daughter, Mary, of Muskegon, Mich., and Mrs. John C. Call, sister of Green Bay, Wis., who were known to attend the funeral of the late Julia Burns, returned home this week.

Mrs. Wm. O'Donnell was a visitor in Charlevoix this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Ward Bennett and son, Kenneth of Elizabeth City, N. C., motored home this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pliard and family are camping in Charlevoix and Boyne City.

Mrs. A. C. Pinckney was a visitor on the mainland this week.

Alfred McCann left Thursday for Mackinaw City where he shipped on the "Fred W. Green".

John Tully was a visitor in Cheboygan and the "Soo" this week.

Miss Lillian Greene arrived Thursday for a visit with her parents Mr. and Mrs. C. J. W. Greene.

Mrs. Francis Busby returned Thursday from Milwaukee.

Miss Joseph South, Jr., returned this week from Chicago. She was accompanied by Miss Mary Briggs.

Oliver McLaren spent a few days in Charlevoix this week.

Miss W. A. Schaal and family of Chicago are at their cottage late for the season.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank O'Donnell and Charles O'Donnell of Chicago are here visiting their mother, Mrs. Mary O'Donnell.

Miss Gene McCafferty of Chicago arrived this week for a visit with her mother, Mrs. Nellie McCafferty. She was accompanied from Grand Haven by her friend, Margaret McCafferty.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Somerville, arrived here this week after a two-week motor trip.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Miller and daughter Janie of Charlevoix were visitors here this week.

Miss Mary M. Orkwiss of Charlevoix spent a few days here visiting at the J. H. Gallagher home.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Sendenburgh, Mr. John McDonough, Mrs. Kathleen Busby and Miss Helen McDonough, all of Mancelona, spent the week-end here, visiting relatives and friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Burns of Chicago are at their cottage here for the summer.

The Hoffman family are at their cottage for the season.

Tom P. Gallagher of Manistique was a visitor here this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Bert Hoffman of Manistique spent the week-end visiting Lighthouse Keeper Mr. Perry O. McKinsey.

Mr. John O'Brien was called to Cheboygan Sunday by the serious illness of his sister, Mrs. Smith.

Miss Lue Kennedy returned to Detroit Sunday after a two-week visit at the Bundy Cottage.

John and James Gallagher were passengers on the Manitou to Charlevoix, Monday.

Capt. Dan McCauley and John Cauley of Manistique were business callers here Sunday.

Capt. and Mrs. C. J. Albers and family of Cheboygan spent the Fourth of July here.

OLDEST FORD DRIVER

J. M. Crow, 89, of Ethel, Miss., the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi, traversed the historic old Natchez Trace in a covered wagon eighty-seven years ago.

A ragged today at 89 as the age in American history is no picnic for grievously ripples, J. M. Crow of Ethel, Miss., is the oldest Ford driver in Mississippi and one of the oldest in the United States.

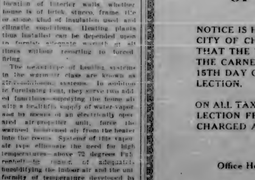
When as a babe of two years he rode with his parents in one of a train of big prairie wagons out of Cobb county, Georgia, into Mississippi, the old Natchez Trace followed by the brave little band was still infested by the swashbuckling outlaws whose bloody outrages gave that area its place in this country's history as "the outlaw years."

One of his vivid recollections is hearing as a boy of six the news of General Scott's victorious assault on the heights of Chapultepec which ended the Mexican War in 1847, and his prudent memory is of honorable amusion as a Confederate soldier during the 1861-65 War. When the southern cause collapsed, Crow was compelled to trudge 400 miles on foot to the ox homestead at Ethel where he settled down to rear a family.

In the intervening years he has seen the lumbering stagecoach give way to the fast automobile and the numberless motorists, the sluggish gumbo and rough corduroy roads of his childhood to the wide, paved roads of today, and although he was long past middle age when the modern automobile became commonplace he is as enthusiastic a driver as youngsters who can boast less than one quarter of his years.

Five generating of Crow's family are frequently seen together in his Model A Ford, the second of its type Crow has owned and driven.

UNIFORM ROOM TEMPERATURE ASSURED BY AIR MOTION



FIND WAY TO SPEED UP MOTION OF AIR

New Types Warm Air Heating Systems Do Away With Cold Floor, Room Problems.

PENNY or two! where it is best wanted. That is the experience of persons who are using a new warm air system the fact that there is insufficient warmth in the room where it is most wanted—at or near floor level. It is not uncommon, says the Holland (Michigan) Chamber of Industry, for the temperature at the ceiling to be as much as 20 degrees between floor and ceiling levels.

Excessive indoor temperatures at ceiling level and inadequate temperatures at floor levels, according to engineers, are responsible for the fact that an air is limited it becomes lighter and rises. Cold air, on the o more drawn, heavier, and remains at the lower levels. So, in spite of the efficiency of a heating plant, there is much indoor discomfort due to unsatisfactory distribution of heat. The thermometer may indicate a temperature of 72 degrees at head level, yet the temperature at floor level where children play may be far too low for health and comfort.

Another common complaint is that the ventilation is poor and unsatisfactory. Many buildings are equipped with air-conditioning systems, but these often are not operated to the fullest advantage because the human element is overlooked. Many systems are equipped to provide for uniform and adequate distribution of the conditioned air.

Machines That Are Almost Human

By E. C. TAYLOR

Census Tabulators

HOW many of the 30,000,000 people now there in the United States who are under the thirty-five years of age married and when, is information that may be greatly assembled the electric task of finding out how the 30,000,000 people of the United States live.

The answers each man, woman and child in the United States gives to the questions asked by the enumerators were recorded by holes on cards. The position of the holes on each card indicated whether the answer was "yes" or "no" to each question and also what each question was. Nothing was written on the cards. They were simply punched with the answers.

To find out the answers to any set of questions such as are asked above, the operator of the machine only has to set the proper triggers and pull gets so that once the farts he wanted to know would be recorded and start the machine.

The cards are dropped into the machine by the thousand, and shoot through at a whirling pace. The machine selects only the cards bearing the proper answers and drops them into a separate receptacle. They are then run through a counting machine and the task is completed.

It looks easy when you see the machine operating. A task that required hundreds of times as long and hundreds of times as many workers is performed accurately and simply. It is another example of how science has produced a machine to do a tedious difficult and worrying task accurately and with skill.

Shrines at Weimar

Weimar contradicts the old proverbs about the honor which finds non-citizens to prophets, for here both Goethe and Schiller are revered even as Shakespeare is at the English Stratford on Avon. Franz Liszt also lived here for twelve years. Körner, the dramatist, was born here and Nietzsche died here. Weimar seems to be a normal center it became, doing as much for it as Weimar's rulers did for it. His house and the Schiller home are open to all visitors.

Tomato Seed of Big Importance

That From Wilt-Resistant Plants Should Be Saved for Next Year.

Home gardeners who are producing wilt-resistant tomatoes will find that the seed from these plants are as good if not better than the seed obtained from ordinary sources, according to H. W. Faut, extension plant pathologist at the North Carolina State college.

"This is especially true if the grower will select only the heaviest bearing and most ripening plants from which to get the seed for next year's planting," he states.

Equipment Needed.

Where only a small amount of seed is to be saved, no extensive storage or small warm-tight vessel is needed. The ripe tomatoes are placed in the vessel and thoroughly crushed. Soft chisel water is added to cover the tomatoes and the mixture is then stirred to ferment. The next day the vessel is filled with water and the mass carefully stirred. By adding more water slowly, the skins, pulps and pulp will float off and the seed sink to the bottom. The water is then drained off and the seed collected.

Mr. Faut states that seed secured from a neighbor who was growing the wilt-resistant variety will, in most cases, give better results than seed bought outside, especially of the Creole type having the seed have been selected.

Wilt-Resistant Varieties.

There are several varieties of wilt-resistant tomatoes, chief among which are the Marvana, Norfolk, Marvel, and Norton. Growers who have any of these varieties planted are safe in saving the seed for the Norton and Marvel are the two that are recommended by Mr. Faut. In tests conducted throughout the state the Norton has shown a greater resistance and also produces a large yield of high quality fruit. Where growers are troubled with wilt, seed from the varieties named should be secured for next year's planting.

Factors Influencing the Keeping Fruit Quality

A new bulletin entitled, "Some Factors Influencing the Keeping Quality of Fruits in Transit," has been published by the colleges of agriculture, University of Illinois, Urbana, Ark., according to results obtained by the experiment station of the college, have been made in the handling of good fruit, now a heavy drain on the resources of Illinois fruit growers, could very largely be prevented by proper precautions in picking, handling, grading and packing.

Three phases of the problem were investigated by the college workers in attempting to work our ways whereby Illinois growers could protect their profits. They compared the carefulness with the rough handling of strawberries, summer apples and peaches. The storage with delayed loading of insects in cars, the temperatures, and studied the use of different types of packages for strawberries and peaches.

Rest Time for Cutting Corn Crop for Silage

A recent circular issued by the Kansas agricultural station brings out some points on the making of silage which are of vital importance to every farmer who has a silo to fill, especially the man who is filling one for the first time. The circular points out the fact that it is desirable to cut the crop for the silo in a very short condition, before the ear and kernels had matured, and a very good silage, high in moisture, was obtained. Also years the tendency has been to allow the corn crop to stand much more mature. The proper time to cut corn for the silo is about a week or ten days before it is ready to put up in the shock; the ear should be well dented and the lower leaves on the stalk dry, but the stalk itself still full of sap.

Roadside Gumption is Needed for Marketing

The path to success in roadside marketing is open, no plain that it is singular how it can ever be missed. Here are the half dozen requirements:

Absolutely fresh produce.

Variety and good quality.

No delays—standing scales.

Courtesy on every sale, however small.

Prices higher than wholesale, lower than retail.

If possible a high-profit sideline.

That is all there is to it, except of course that your stand must be on a highway, that is traveled, or can be traveled. Gumption will get people to it.

Attractive signs help. Parking space off the highway is good, and in some states is compulsory.

Dropping of McIntosh

One of the chief faults of the McIntosh apple is its failure to remain on the trees after ripening, particularly in certain orchard sections like the Central states, and in the northern parts of the Northwest. No one has yet found a remedy for this early dropping following ripening of the McIntosh variety.

The Jonathan apple ranks in this same class, although it does not drop as readily as the apples of the McIntosh does in the Central states section.

Control Pea Aphis

Pea growers have on occasion suffered considerably from heavy infestations of pea aphis. These may become increase with incredible rapidity and a good many times it seems as if there is very little that can be done to control them. However, the New Jersey experiment station reports a successful control by dusting with a dust made of 20 pounds of hydrated lime and three pints of Black Leaf Forty mixed and applied immediately.

AGAINST ODDS

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

It was a thrilling story that they told of Buchanan at the services which crowned his victory and his death which should give those who heard it a higher appreciation of duty; a stronger determination to win the battle of life and serve against odds

Buchanan had always shown a courage equally which he admired. He was a big man, with the muscles of a football player, and he had always shown a strength of body for doing things which he undertook to do, no matter what it might cost in personal labor and effort, or even danger to himself. It became almost an obligation, he said it. He was a young naval officer in charge of a detachment of marines in Nicaragua. The Nicaraguan town which he was guarding was attacked by a band of revolutionists, more in number of marines at Buchanan's disposal. He might call have hesitated to engage them in battle. Ten to one the odds were against him and the marines knew the country in which they were making their unsuccessful fight better than he did. He was his duty, however, and there was no hesitation, he led the marines in a fight. He won his battle, notwithstanding the odds against him, though he lost his life. It takes courage to engage in any part of contest against odds.

"I am willing to try you out on the job," the superintendent said to Craig, "because you show much enthusiasm for your work, but I want you to understand that you haven't one chance in 100 of making good. Your preparation for the work is not as good as it should be, you are young and inexperienced, and you are going into a most difficult position where you have resigned because they saw that they were facing failure."

Preparing to Salvage Sunken Gold

San Francisco.—A little gray haired man with small, spherical eyes and a determined mouth sat in the lobby of the Palace hotel recently and told of a treasure hunt on the high seas as full of adventure, thrills and suspense as anything ever conceived by Stevenson or Conrad.

Capt. Charles H. Haskell, inventor and veteran salvager, who announced to the world a short time ago that he had located the old Pacific Mail liner Rio de Janeiro that went down off the hidden reefs in 1901 with $3,000,000 aboard and a reputed $5,000,000 in bullion, when he filed a claim at the recorder's office, was the speaker.

But as to where the claim actually is or exactly how he found it, Captain Haskell was cautiously reticent.

Pooh-ha have said until I said some subtle code to locate the ship; that I used an ocean sounding device that I used a diving suit and many other things.

"Well, what I used results was just plain common sense, and I've always been able to get results when I've given some matter of plain good hard work when it comes to finding things."

"I found the ship all by myself" he a secret but simple method," he said.

"The actual search took only three days. Yesterday I had been looking at it various times since the vessel sank.

"I had come to San Francisco in that year to meet an old friend, who was supposed to be on board, but who luckily had missed the boat in Honolulu. Naturally, I was stirred with a desire to find the vessel, as many were at the time.

"Now I have located a ship in the spot where the life ought to be.

"Naturally, I can't assure that it is the life, but I believe it is. And I saw nothing unreasonable to raise it to prove the question."

Further than that Captain Haskell would not comment, other than to reveal that he has received a sudden flux of letters since his claim was made public, some of them from people who offer to help him, some who just want to join the adventure of salvaging the vessel, and even some—women—who want to marry him.

A tinted party of Manhattanites was overnight to close a week-end in Connecticut. Trud and wan from the effects of too much merry-making in the chairs of the parlor car. One of the women of the party opened her mail of the time at which the report was received.

These reports are received every few hours, and it is left to the pilots of the largest cheering conditions over the route he expects to fly.

Then great sailing at time and great—or reliability are affected by the state of the maps. The sheeting things instantaneously show the pilot just what is new and, whether conditions are changing and where he should begin and finish a turn in order to escape bad weather if his mission is urgent.

The Navy department is enthusiastic about the new device and plans are under way to have similar maps installed at the Naval air stations at Hampton Roads and at San Diego, Calif. Very likely it will soon find its way to commercial airports.

"CIMARRON"

By EDNA FERBER
(Copyright by Edna Ferber.)
WNU Service.)

THE STORY

Yancey Cravat, just reformed from the newly opened Indian territory, salves his experiences by a large gathering of the Venable family. Yancey is married to Sabra Venable, is a striking beauty, and the daughter of Wyoming. When the Run started Yancey had raced his pony against the thousand-mad rush of a girl. The girl's horse was injured and when Yancey stopped to shoot it she grabbed his claim and got the land Yancey wanted. Yancey attempts to be kind to the girl, Dixie Lee, and she falls with Sabra and their footprints all over Cimarron. They make the journey to Cimarron in a covered wagon. They arrive at Osage, where Yancey intends to start a newspaper Yancey is determined to find out who killed Isaiah Venable, his father-in-law. Dressing for the publication of Yancey's first issue Wyoming are completed.

"Yancey, this office of mine's badly piled." Jesse Rickey, journeyman printer and quondam partner, was responsible for this misfortune, having gathered and packed away, and dropped a case, face down, to the rest of the road while assisting Yancey to move. "I'll have to be sorted before you get out your next issue."

"No, Rickey—it tend to that. I've got a bit of important work to do. Editorials to write, news to get, list of real estate transfers—and I'm going to find out who killed Isaiah Venable and print it in the first issue if it takes the last drop of blood in me. I'll show them, first crack, that the Oklahoma Wigwam prints all the news and don't mind knowing the law but the law of God and the government of these United States. They can't run this paper, just above the editorial column."

In the end it was she who sorted out the type of pied type. The nine years of Yancey's newspaper ownership in Wichita had familiarized her almost unconsciously with many of the case classified angels of a newspaper printing office.

The hand press was finally set up, and the office job press, and the case rack containing the type. The rollers were in place and their little stick of paste. The boy was pretty sleepy when Yancey and Sabra was convinced that it was she who had directed most of this manual work and had insisted on the distribution of each of it, with Isaiah and Jesse Rickey to help her. Yancey would lose himself in the printing of a line, and then the blanks of reference, and his favorite sentence, for which he contended he was not enough shelf room in the office to hold, was: "Mrs. Sabra Cravat of Osage is a guest of Mrs. Wyatt Lucas of Cimarron."

Sabra argued with him, almost hysterically, but in vain. "You didn't do anything about helping them catch the Kid, sell them on the prairie when they were looking for him, and now you're all set to assign her a statement—and he had kissed a man, too, and rubbed a hand, and I don't know what all."

"That was different. She's different. She's Sabra," Yancey answered, unreasonably and infuriatingly.

"Yes, that's how different! What's this Fegler to you? They'll kill you, too—they'll do it, just because of what she's done—Cim—Cim—and I love, alone—Yancey, darling—I love you so—you know I would happen to you—" She waxed incoherent.

"There, there, there, wash your crying and listen. Try to understand. The boy's a farmer. He's a good one, but it isn't his fault. The government at Washington made him an outlaw. The law-abiding citizens of Cimarron—there were fences or railroads in Kansas, and there was no Cherokee Strip—they were all with the intention of making the Indians move on. He was born a farmer and he's going to be a farmer. He's got to have land. Just as soon as he's established he'll be all right. He'll be a decent man and a good citizen. He'll be all right. He'll be all right. He'll be all right

WHY BACK TO NORMAL?

By Robert R. Johnston

Advertising Executive, New York City

Almost every article, speech and even conversation sooner or later seems to get around to some such expression as "When things get back to normal, such and such should happen."

What is this thing called "normal?" And how do we know when it existed and when we may expect to reach it again?

Average, yes, we can figure averages over the five years '24 to '29, or any other arbitrary period, or we can take "pre-war" as a basis for discussion—but what good does that do now? And what harm?

Would it be safe to call '28 or '29 normal? Manifestly not. Or '30, '31? God forbid! Well, if these are abnormal, or subnormal, what's the sense in there to take any period of years and call them by this meaningless name of normal?

Isn't it just barely possible that every year, every period, yes, every month is normal for that particular time and condition of the public mind?

From '23 to '29 the normal state of mind of Americans and most of the world was to believe that tomorrow would be better than today and consequently to discount the future and plan new things to do—new enterprises—greater expansion—wider markets. Now the public mind is scared stiff. Then, we spent a dollar with faith we'd have another and maybe two, tomorrow. Now we bring on to nickels for fear they'll become pennies.

But why this sudden condition turned? Europeans, particularly the Scotch and French, have had to practice frugality for years. How do we know America has not reached the stage of development where prodigal spending is a thing of the past?

We cut down our forests—and spent them. We opened new land—and spent it. We found gold, silver, iron and oil—and spent them. We developed new industries to take up the saving in man power by machines—and spent and spent and spent.

Better farming—jobs in the mills. Better machines—jobs in automobile factories. Straight time production—jobs as garage men, chauffeurs. Radio absorbed its share of man power.

But what next? Hasn't man power to be absorbed back into existing industries?

So why not think of the present situation as normal? Why not stir the public mind to ambitious projects within existing industries. Why shouldn't more men find the courage to go into business for themselves, promote for all they're worth, take men in with them?

Have men stopped thinking about what they would like to do? Is ambition dead in this country of ours? Can't we take ordinary business risks any more? Haven't we any "guts"?

Of course, the future is a certain difficult to penetrate. But progress lies in desire to penetrate it—individual courage to brave hazards—fight for rewards.

Normal? Today is normal for today. Tomorrow may just as well be abnormal as subnormal compared with today. It will not be better unless every man back of us wants to make it better, tries to do more and has faith and courage of his desires.

OPTIMISM FOR THE RAILROADS

In a recent address, Carl R. Gray, President of the Union Pacific Railroad, sounded an optimistic note concerning the future of his industry.

"There seems to be a feeling more or less prevalent," said Mr. Gray, "that the steam railways which have been the fundamental transportation in America for a century, are seriously threatened with decadence. And to this I take exception.

"The growth of America has been measured by and has been responsive chiefly to its transportation capacities. No one agency other than the railroads can more than partially supply this need and that only in a desultory and widely separated way.

"A great many people wholly mistake the railroad situation. The railroads in and of themselves do not produce or create. They are, on the contrary, a result. They are the reflex of business conditions in this country, and probably the most faithful reflex. When business is depressed, they are depressed; and when business comes back, they come back. It is as impossible in the last analysis for the railroads to be kept from participating in the nation's prosperity as it is for them to avoid participation in its vicissitudes . . .

"The railroads are now sharing the depression from which all business is suffering. To entertain any doubt that the railroads will come back, is to entertain an equal doubt that America's business will recover; and this doubt you and I do not for one minute share."

A WARNING

For some time past Chicago has stood before the public as unable to pay many of its current bills due to lack of tax funds. The mayor has stated that he does not know how the city will find its way out of its difficulties.

Without going into the reasons for Chicago's financial troubles, the situation is an object lesson for other municipalities. It proves that too much spending can embarrass an individual, a city, county, state or nation.

Chicago has the power of taxation to eventually pull itself out of the hole but even the power to tax can be carried to a point where the people refuse to pay. The disproportionate increase in taxation throughout the nation compared to growth in population and wealth, is a warning to ease upon raids on the public treasuries.

HIGHER GASOLINE PRICES HELPFUL

Gasoline price wars—which have been unfortunately fought in many states during recent months—are considered by many motorists to be an unmixed blessing. Where once they were forced to pay 20 cents a gallon for fuel, they could buy it for ten cents—and if the oil industry took a loss in the process it was nothing to them.

But the San Francisco Chronicle points out that during the last "war," a frontier view of the situation was developed. "The industry, one of the largest in California, is operating at a loss, which sooner or later will disastrously affect its thousands of employes" says the Chronicle. "The public will feel that in its pocket nerve.

"The Government is losing large sums of money in taxes. The other taxpayers—which means everyone—will have to make up the difference."

What is true in California, is likewise true in many other states. At a time when industries established on stimulated employment are the burning issue of the day, a losing business is a thing for all of us and return to normal gasoline prices should be welcomed as a sign of better business and employment conditions.

CRIME CAUSES

The causes of crime are almost infinite in number.

The pressure of social forces, racial influences, poverty, false standards of education, even climatic conditions—all these are responsible to some degree for law breaking, serious or otherwise. And so are the better known causes such as drug addiction, alcoholism, illiteracy, the gang spirit and blood taints like insanity.

The very complexity and number of crime causes is an unanswerable argument against the effort to subdue the criminal by passing more and more penal laws. The penologist, the criminologist, the psychiatrist—in their hands lies the true future of crime prevention. Mere legislation prohibiting the use of various instruments or chemicals which might be used to commit a crime, cannot overcome the conditions, physical, emotional and mental, that are responsible for making thieves and murderers.

BARRING THE TORCH

Hollywood, which has already given civilization such great movies as the bathing beauty, the sheik trouser, the spit curl and the charlie chaplin moustache, has attempted a new suggestion. A firm of movie-makers has told its principal male star that he must no longer smoke cigars, because cigars are "unromantic." If this is true it seems to us that the manhood of this nation should rise in revolt while there is still manhood left to rise in revolt.

Romance is only a comparative thing, affected by the fashions of the moment. Once it was romantic for fine ladies to take snuff and sneeze their heads off. Once it was not uncommonplace for gently reared ladies and gentlemen to eat with their fingers and throw any remains of food on the rush-carpeted floor, there to remain until spring housecleaning. Romance follows the changing fashions from generation to generation.

What changing manners, if the movie magnates are right, has made the cigar unromantic? It can only be the decline of manliness or a growing feminine taste for delicately featured and tempered movie actors largely indistinguishable from women. Robust, full-flavored and fragrant, the cigar has always been distinctively a man's smoke, just as a fine rare T-bone steak, smothered in mushrooms, is distinctively a man's dish. Women have never smoked cigars because this was suitably recognized. Amy Lowell, the poet, smoked strong cigars, one after the other but her independent mind did not fear imputations of mannishness.

When men give up cigars they will begin ordering chicken salad from choice. It may only be a little after that that the movie men will order their stars to wear petticoats!

FRANCE RUNS TRUE TO TYPE

France has not been an agreeable neighbor to the United States and the rest of the World since the close of the World War, and it is not surprising that France immediately began juggling with President Hoover's debt offer. While practically the whole world agreed on a plan the French continued to hold out for their pound of flesh.

There are a lot of people around Washington right now who predict the possibility of another war before many years. France is today the most militaristic government in the world.

But of course, America mustn't forget LaFayette, who suffered a great deal for our country, but who suffered a great deal more afterwards as a political prisoner in France.

VACATION IN MICHIGAN

From The Sentinel Files

News Items Taken From The Sentinel of this date Thirty Forty, Fifty and Sixty Years Ago

FORTY YEARS AGO

The Charlevoix cannon was returned from East Jordan last week, charges prepaid. Thanks.

Judge Clover and wife and Mrs. Dr. Valle and children, of St. Louis, Mo., are at the Fountain City House for the summer.

Yesterday A. D. Cruickshank purchased of Amos Fox the telegraphic corner lot on the corner of North Bridge street and the State road opposite the Hitzau place, and will erect a residence thereon at once.

Walter Crawford of Milford, Mich., was chumming with Capt. Harrison Berdan yesterday. Mr. Crawford was a member of Co. G., Berdan's company in the 5th Michigan cavalry for three years during the war. The meeting was a happy one.

Glen Lake in Leelanaw county is a beautiful body of water, lying among the bluffs bordering on Lake Michigan, into which it flows, at a certain season of the year—"at its blossoming season" as it is locally expressed—its waters become poisonous. During this time no one drinks it, swallow of water. The people say it feels as if they were swallowing needles, it gives such a pricking sensation and anyone bathing in it suffers as if they had been stung.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

Fred Sargent will attend the Yorktown celebration in October. The legislature, at their last session, appropriated $5,000 for the expenses of state officers and legislature.

Let us enforce the law relative to herds running at large or repeal it. A drove of ten horses or a sheep through the streets is dangerous to the droves of children which frequent Main Street these days.—Ex.

RECOVERING

Reasonable Hopes of the Recovery of President Garfield.

President Garfield continues to improve and the prospects seem to be that he will recover. While he is in no danger, he is not entirely out of the woods, and will not be for some days to come. His pulse is still high, and his temperature is not yet normal. His appetite is improving, and he is able to take more nourishment. His wounds are doing well, and the surgeons are hopeful of his recovery.

SIXTY YEARS AGO

Juries are undoubtedly of a very serious nature, there is ground for believing that they are far less severe than was at first supposed. The discovery that the penetrating power of the cartridges used by Guiteau was very small is an indication in the President's favor. The steady improvement in his condition since the shooting tends also to the belief that his injuries are not so bad as has been thought. Still, it should not be forgotten that he is by no means out of danger and may yet be carried off by an unfavorable turn in the symptoms. His escape has been a narrow one and all we can do is to hope for the best. A dispatch received from Washington at the Sentinel office yesterday states that the President had a comfortable night, the night previous and was steadily improving. Pulse 96, temperature 99; respiration 25.

Last there are three times who consider the late Fourth of July celebration at Elsworth a "frost," we wish to state that if it was there were many greater frosts throughout the state than on that day. In Charlevoix, as in hundreds of other places, the corporation and citizens first rose concerning the attack on the President, caused a cessation of all effort on the part of committees on Saturday and up to Sunday noon, the idea of celebrating had been abandoned. Even after that hour, the fact that our honored President was still struggling for upon his death bed, threw a feeling of gloom and sadness upon all, which could not have been otherwise than ruinous to any occasion of joy or amusement.

CHARLEVOIX REAL ESTATE

The activity in transfers of Charlevoix real estate and the ruling high prices at which property is readily sold, is the most encouraging phase of the development and growth of our town.

We stated last week that a Cincinnati man—ex-mayor, by the way—had purchased the Chamberlain property, on the corner of Bridge and Clinton streets, for $4,500 and now comes a Richmond, Ind., bank president, who made L. D. Bartholomew an offer of $5,000 cash for the Black lot on the corner of Bridge and Main streets. An offer of $840 was generously made by the latter for seventy feet front on the same lot (212 feet deep) and negotiations are now in progress between them for its transfer. If this sale is not made it will be because of certain existing verbal misunderstandings between Mr. Bartholomew and certain Charlevoix people for building sites on the lot, at prices proportionately large. In any event the lot will soon be disposed of at a price not less than $2,000.

This lot, which is in the heart of the town, was purchased fourteen years ago by Capt. Wm. Black for about $40. He resided it until the spring of 1880, when he sold it to Mr. Bartholomew for $680. A month ago its owner would have refused $2,000 for the lot, which offer was refused. It is the intention of the Richmond party, if he succeeds in purchasing, to erect next summer a row of brick blocks fronting on Bridge street.

The same gentleman on Wednesday made a formal offer to E. H. Green, of $5,000 for his lots on Bridge street which was refused.

The reasons for all this is the fact that capitalists who have had their attention confined hitherto to railroad towns, have discovered Charlevoix to be the most prominent point on Northern Michigan tourist, possessed as it is of all the natural advantages in conjunction with schools, capital and enterprise always make commercial centers.

John Infruhl is the name of a Chicago saloon-keeper.

D. C. Nettleton is finishing up his wagon factory, and when completed this building will be an ornament to the village.

School Meetings—The adjourned school meeting came off on Monday evening, but was slimly attended. Judge Byers decided that the administrators of the Mann estate have the right to sell the site selected for the school building. It was decided to advertise it, which will probably meet with the approval of the administrators, as it will result the same in the estate. The meeting adjourned sine die.

COUNCIL PROCEEDINGS

July 13, 1931.

The common council of the city of Charlevoix met on the above date with Mayor Bergeon presiding.

Aldermen present — Fessenden, Parker, Hooker, Kibbe, Smith and Webster.

Minutes of meeting held June 22, 1931, were read and approved.

The petition as read was referred to the ordinance committee and city attorney.

The finance committee having examined the following bills aggregating $6,472.94 find them correct and recommend for payment:

They know that "pep" and interest in life come from perfect health.

Many old men with young faces have told us that Fellows' Syrup is their standby. They take it regularly. They wouldn't be without it.

Go to your druggist's today, get a bottle of this valuable tonic. Take a three teams daily, and watch your "pep" return.

Who Remembers Days of Old-Fashioned Bootjack?

The long, leather boots and the hundreds of grandsire's days are mostly forgotten. Yet it is worth the comfort of many when both were plentiful. While a few footlights were used from time and could be bought at hardware stores the most popular ones were homemade. They were simple in design, just a sawhorse board with a crosser to raise the heel and from the floor and the sitter or rest to stand on.

Then with a limb it was just always easy to remove a right-fitting boot that had been worn all day and had perhaps been wet. In such an event father was likely to impress a son as a lesson hopeless. Sitting barefoot him he would rebuke the boot however the boy's foot just with his stocking foot pressed against the hind quarters always sufficed. Savages on remote the staircase footwear in New England facing families, where calls or boots are frequently on use, with every shed automatic in use.

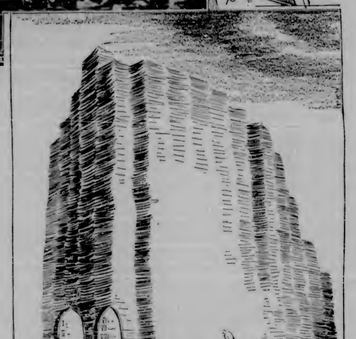
"There Ought to Be a Law—!"

Congress Convenes—For the purpose of making more laws!



"The Laws of Moses and of Today" by C. D. Fitzpatrick of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch

1925 Pulitzer Prize Cartoon

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

MR. JOHN SITTZEN strapped into his home, snorting with indignation. He had had an unpleasant experience at a meeting of representatives, through ignorance and lack of consideration upon the part of Mr. William Citizen which had caused him some temporary discomfort, if not permanent injury. So little the sympathetic ear of his wife he poured out his grievance and sought his needs with the declaration, "There ought to be a law!"

But should there? For some time critics of our democracy have been telling us that one of the things that's the matter with us is that we have too many laws on the books and too little observance of even a small per cent of them. So why should we add to the number and then have another law which will be forgotten almost as soon as it is passed to join the long list of those which are either unknown or even if they are known, are disregarded? One of the most powerful cartoons ever drawn by an American cartoonist was awarded a Pulitzer prize in 1925. It was "The Laws of Moses and the Laws of Today," by Jerome B. Fitzpatrick of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. Take a look at it as it is reproduced with this article. Then it will not be necessary to say another word in this article as to whether or not there should be any more laws.

But whether there should be or shouldn't, the fact remains that our hundreds of lawless laws still goes merrily on their way to fill a place in the statute books and to provide employment for parch-earned the more that there are not enough laws to go around. Some dozen times this year and thoughtful men, feeling that more laws were necessary, have set about with the determination to remedy the situation. Some of them succeeded and others failed, but the spirit was there. The attempt to remedy the situation came from many sources, from the humblest citizen to the governors of the states and others are being made to secure funds for the purpose from benevolent sons of other countries.

Very often standing in line isn't worth it.

Of the founder of Rhode Island it did set on other obscure statutes. Having little else to do, the assembly found some curious examples of how the American people or at least their delegated authorities, sought law to regulate their habits—or at any rate, the habits of the other fellow. For instance, one legislator discovered that there was a law which set the length that an improved hen can might project from the crown of a woman's hat at one-half inch. This went back only to 1915, when the ladies wore many large ornamental hat pins, projecting like daggers, several inches from their hats. Some conservative soul had noticed as a legislator decided "there ought to be a law" against long hatpins and it was passed after considerable but not particularly heated debate. In these days of bobbed hair and close fitting hats hatpins are virtually unknown, so the law was no longer needed. But it took the makers of Massachusetts 12 years to get around to finding that out.

It took them no longer to get around to finding out about certain other obsolete statutes. Shortly after the beginning of this year in Massachusetts and it became one of the hobbies of administration which finally brought about the "clean sweep." But in so doing it discovered that there still remained on the statute books, and presumably in full force a law which specified that anyone who "sells or in any way transfers the name or likeness of a person" may have unlawfully taken from the commonwealth shall be punished for a first offense by imprisonment for a term of one year in state prison or a fine of $1,000." Resuscitator of the old days when the bear tamer and his trained bear was a familiar sight along the roads is a section of the Massachusetts general laws forbidding the "leading or driving a bear or other dangerous wild animal on a public highway."

Spirit of Massachusetts in connection with laws which have been enacted in that state and one inevitably thinks of the famous "blue laws" which are usually associated with the word "Puritanism." Such an association is often an incorrect one, for by far the greater number besides Massachusetts have had "blue laws," Huntress Myers, in "Ye Olden Blue Laws," points out the Puritans' decree in 1629 against the planting of peaches was the beginning of the whole code of prohibitive laws. The fight against tobacco was a losing one, it says, because the average Puritan liked cussing so well that he not only smoked but drank it. The law was held invalid by a court decision in 1795.

The next battle was against fashion; in 1634 the general court of Massachusetts passed a summary act.

"The stated grounds for the law," said Mr. Myers "were extravagance in apparel economy and the immodesty of the new fashions. Costly apparel, the law said, enabled proud, superficious and unnecessary expenses. The common wearing of silver or gold girdles, silk hoods, bat bands and other such adornments was a folly.

"It was therefore decreed that no man or woman was to wear a watch or any gold or silver jewel, whether wooden, silk or linen, with any lace on it, cutwork or edging with any silver, gold or silk thread. If any person presumed to appear in clothes of that kind the clothes were to be confiscated.

"One of the Puritans' very first laws was one against idleness. This did not extend to mere shiftlessness. A couple of women exchanging gossip (which was then the only vehicle of news); a youth sitting on a stump and contemplating landscape beauties; a group of men in expensive social converse—all these and many others came under the ban of idleness.

"Death for cursing or striking parents was decreed.

"The law prohibited at all times fiddling, piping or any other kind of music in taverns or other public houses. It equally forbade singing, dancing or reveling in those places. The law specifically prohibited carousing not only on Sunday but also on Saturday night. It forbade funerals on Sunday except those publicly announced. It prohibited walking, proselyting or riding in streets, lanes, roads and fields.

As for the "sins laws" in other colonies, Mr. Myers states that in New York pastimes on Sundays were forbidden as well as worldly labor and this included hunting, shooting, horse racing and other sports. Connecticut followed the lead of Massachusetts in classifying actors as vagabonds and forbidding acting and plays. Death was the punishment for blasphemy according to one of Connecticut's twelve capital laws based upon the Mosaic code, but there appears to be no case recorded where this penalty was inflicted.

We commonly think of the Cavaliers of Virginia as being more "broad-minded" than the Puritans of New England but compulsory church attendance was one of the initial Virginia laws. The penalty for violation was a fine of a pound of tobacco. If a person stayed away for a month the fine was fifty pounds of tobacco.

Some of the early day fun hunting enlisters of Virginia often acted in a manner that cruel and stupid, but when they were restricted they showed a law governing the people from committing such deeds. The corny and the church wardens and vestries were censors of morals and managers of public and private life. The stocks, pillory, whipping post and ducking stool came much later in Virginia than in New England," says Mr. Myers, "but they were set up in every county court house. Anyone, under oath or affirmation, ordered the Virginia army regulations of 1676—who blasphemed the name of God should, for every offense, run the gauntlet through one hundred men or three-quarters of an hour. And if the blasphemer persisted in his wickedness he was 'to be bored through the tongue with a hot iron.'"

But last contents of other states got the idea that the commonwealths on the Atlantic seaboard, with their heritage of "the laws" from colonial days, are the only ones whose statute books have been, or still are, cluttered up with legal oddities and ef-quities, consider now the case of a middle western state. Away back in the early days of Illinois the legislature of that state passed what was known as "the little bull law." Unlike some other legislative measures it did not have to wait long before it was repealed. By this act small bulls were prohibited, under severe penalties on their owners, from running at large. It was designed to improve the breed of cattle in the prairie state, but it never appeared that passing such a law was not the way to do it.

Immediately there arose a storm of popular indignation. The "little bulls" found champions of considerable. The law was denounced as being the "work of the aristocrats" and intended to favor the rich who could afford to own large bulls, and who would profit by the destruction of the small-ones. More than that the outraged citizenry felt there should be an equality of privileges even among bulls. So the frightened legislature immediately repealed the "little bull" bill, but it was not done soon enough to save some of the bantlings from the fire of their constituency. Many an embryo statesman in that legislature was lost to his country because he voted for the bill and many of them failed for re-election on that issue alone.

If space allowed, the list of useless laws, of unnecessary laws, of laws which are destined to become so in a very legal deathbed could be extended indefinitely and it would include every state in the Union. Try the business of making laws still goes merrily on and still we, disregarding the fact that we already have between 2,000,000 and 10,000,000 of them, continue to declare every so often, "There ought to be a law—!" Yes, there ought to be a few, indeed—a few against making more laws!

ARTISTRY IN COOKERY

The cook who really enjoys mixing ingredients as a painter does his colors will find an hour in the delightful kitchen which one may engenders or enlarge upon with the materials at hand. You do not need to follow a few fundamental principles in cookery, and after that let the imagination soar, for there is no end to invention.

After some experience with limiting foods, most inventive women may be prepared from bits of leftovers. The cook who wastes nothing, not even her food in a dainty, appetizing manner, is a real genius and her talents are ever in demand.

It is not always wise to tell all one knows as to the contents of a dish, for some conventional objectors will refuse to try a made-over dish, or rearranged food.

Now, who will dare to call a steamed pudding a leftover? Yet one may prepare a most "tasty one with a few ounces of corn bread, cupful of leftover cereal, a bit of oatmeal, a few raisins and a couple of egg yolks left from some icing or dessert.

Use the things you have at hand—anyone who knows little about foods can prepare a good meal if the market can be called upon with no regard to expense.

Do you use the half-cupful, more or less, of leftover ice cream in a cake or pudding?

Leftover custard may be used the next day for a pudding sauce.

As we should regard a good meal as important to health, we will learn to appreciate and value the food that makes a good meal.

Accidents in often the product of new things, as the discovery of one woman when making a sponge cake that it was more fetching when the egg yolks were added unbeaten and stirred in to make the cake streaked gold and white in appearance.

Good Illustration of "Horns of a Dilemma"

A "dilemma" is a thing taken for granted (from the Greek word "assumo," to take). A "dilemma" is a double lemma, a two-edged sword which strikes both ways, or a bull which will toss you whichever horn you grasp. A classic illustration of a dilemma is given in the following ancient story. A young rhetorician said to an old sophist, "Teach me to plead and I will pay you when I gain a cause." The master sued for payment and the scholar pleaded, "If I gain the cause, I shall not pay you, because the judge will say I am not to pay; and if I lose my cause I shall not be required to pay, according to the terms of our agreement." To this the master replied, "Not so; if you gain your cause you must pay me according to the terms of our agreement, and if you lose your cause, the judge will condemn you to pay me."

"Home Is the Word"

At the banks in which she held the international peace conference. The Hague is rapidly extending to the popular seaside resort of Scheveningen. Close to this popular resort is the Peace palace, erected at a cost of $1,500,000, donated by Andrew Carnegie. The Foundation stone was laid July 30, 1907, and bears the inscription: "Tact justis firmandae haec sedes Andreas Carnegii munificentia dedicavit." The building was finished after the first peace conference and was intended to be the meeting place of the permanent court of arbitration.

Concerning Kissing

Kissing the Bible after taking an oath is merely a token that you have sealed your oath with your lips. In ancient Greece the hand was kissed toward the rising sun. The Bible appears to have been that the breath was the life of man and that giving a part of the breath to the object adored was in the nature of a sacrifice.

Mental Treatment Best to Overcome Moodiness

One of the commonest traits among "modern women is "moodiness," according to a recent psychologist study. The psychologists have been making a care for it, and decisive plan mental treatments, administered by the sufferer herself, give the best results.

Moodiness is a thing you mentally encourage by a wrong "temperament" declares Anne Bryan Mercer in the Woman's Home Companion. To make herself easy acquaintance with others and measures for entertaining, [illegible] people are quite necessities and stimulations to others. Her own and friends use dry and the calm may be active or encouraged of nervous.

"Many do that indulge a disposition to moodiness by their own disciplinary. Almost unsuspecting moodiness is the easy thing, the beautiful thing, the unconstraint thing. If you carry the moodiness further, and you justify [illegible] to see that it is under the primitive thing, the instinctive thing. The mother thing are a matter of fact moodiness and unnecessary are unnecessary traits of stronger ethics.

"The person who is with indulging in emotional ways of mood is nervous. is a person who is not learning up with civilization. This is [illegible] who is trying to satisfy others way out. It is the person who is not disciplined and who is content to live out-to-date this sure-thing who is to a profession more especially trained the fellow."

The remedy according to the psychologists is for the victim of moodiness to ask herself the following questions every day, and answer all them honestly: "How much have I been today? How much effort did it take? How understanding is short now, interest and surveyed a person have I been?"

ENGINEERS FIND ANSWER TO HOME COOLING PROBLEM

Electrified Propeller Keeps Up Lively Circulation of Air Through House.

Engineers know four ways to produce a cooling effect in homes, how many factories and other big buildings and, according to the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich., the same methods could be used in the average home. The air conditioning engineer's first ways of producing a cooling, 70 degrees coolness when it's sweltering 100 degrees out side.

1. He may cause the air through cold water or cold brine sprays, or over cold coils, or by many combined both ways.

2. He may evaporate water without adding heat to the air or subtracting it, a rather complicated, mechanical process which results in much cooling.

3. He may reduce the moisture content of the air to lessen or cooling before the dew point, as in a dehumidifier.

4. He may, except in the most severe conditions, reduce the effect of sweltering without any actual drop in temperature, simply by inducing air movement by fans, the air moving with steady velocity.

Method 4 is by far the most common. Since the National Institute of Technology the result is ascribed down by the fact that on the first three methods require expensive and complicated machinery.

Cooling by means of air is that it takes less time to warm up the house on cold mornings. Also, these systems maintain more uniform temperatures, which are the more healthful.

HOME AIR MORE DEADLY THAN BULLETS

CHANGE HOME AIR 6 TIMES AN HOUR

Systems of Air-Conditioning Cut Down Huge Toll of Life and Health.

THE number of Americans soldiers killed by enemy fire in the World war was less than one-fourth of the number of people killed by impure air in American homes each year. During the World war 50,360 American soldiers were killed on the battlefields. But here in America and right within the homes four times this number of people are killed each year by air-borne disease germs which cause colds, pneumonia, influenza, and other respiratory diseases, according to the Holland Institute of Technology.

Heating and ventilating science has in modern warm air heating kept in the vapor all hyperthree which disease sufficient water to adequately humidify indoor air—delivered at effective steam or sunlight the air from of unseen disease germs that cause those diseases.

These systems are more than just heating systems. They are air-conditioning systems. In addition to forcing warm air, they supply ample moisture to offset the lack of moisture in winter air; they develop moderate, uniform temperatures in every room; and they keep the air in draftless motion, completely changing the air in a room five or six times an hour.

In performing these various functions modern warm air systems make possible a greater indoor comfort during winter months than is enjoyed in summertime. The research of the past few years has done much to overcome the problems which have long perplexed the heating engineer. Now, with the aid of the electric motor, he has at his command a simple, practical means of producing a cooling effect in homes, how many factories and other big buildings and, according to the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland, Mich., the same methods could be used in the average home. The air conditioning engineer's first ways of producing a cooling, 70 degrees coolness when it's sweltering 100 degrees out side.

on them into warm, the new type systems on a basis to the thousands because they make the necessary energy.

In addition to keeping the home air free from dust, germs, warm air heating systems can be used to clean and purify the air as it is circulated over the hot heater.

In connection these new functions supplying warm humidified, sterilized air, heating systems of the newer air type keep the temperature humidifiers in a healthful condition. And in any cooling system consequently that adds moisture to the air, the humidifier is under constant inspection, they help us to build up healthy indoor climate of to assure a desirable humidity.

Use More Water to Cut Fuel Bills

More extensive use of water as an aid to economical heating is forecast by the Holland Institute of Technology of Holland Mich. According to the institute, home owners will in future continue to turn more and more to tricks as much water as coal during the heating season.

The water will be utilized for evaporative moistening the house air, and quite humidification of the home so makes possible the enjoyment of far greater indoor comfort at moderate temperatures of 70 or 72 degrees than is now obtainable with the high temperatures that circumstances the average home is heated during winter.

In the average six-room house, approximately 8 gallons of water should be evaporated daily. In winter this means 56 pounds of water or possibly by two-thirds of one pounds of coal consumed, assuming 50 pounds of coal is burned per day.

Injecting the water vapor from this much water into the house air is most economically accomplished by having plants of the vapor air type. The automatic humidifier that is a part of

War on Furnace Soot Repays Home Owner

As the result of the efforts of an office on the Union Carbide and Carbon Corporation, after war on the heating engineers, 20 per cent decrease in the consumption of fuel by the Institute of Technology Holland Mich.

Parts made to manufacture every practical advance in the heating process conducted by engineers at the Institute are at Michigan in connection with the Institute. Furnace soot is a problem as well as many others of importance to the heating engineer.

This being to minimize an offensive economical nuisance, the Institute has certain cleaning on burning plant at Holland and the lower portion of steam and the lower portion of steam. The complete cleanliness should be effected by the Institute of Technology.

Soot is found in most locations with the owner to better functioning of the heating plant if used frequently Where a coal is used, the Institute recommends owners to send an ash in the sweet, effective method of freeing of reaching the soot and dust in the heated heavily furnace of the heating plant.

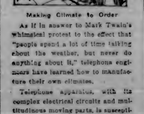
TRUE TALES OF THE TELEPHONE



Making Climate to Order

As if in answer to Mark Twain's whimsical protest to the effect that "people spend a lot of time talking about the weather, but never do anything about it," telephone engineers have learned how to manufacture their own climates.

Telephone apparatus, with its complex electrical circuits and multitudinous moving parts, is susceptible to climatic conditions, including humidity. It is accordingly necessary to create these atmospheric conditions artificially for testing purposes.

The Bell laboratories have therefore factories' ranging from large corkdimensional rooms to small, portable devices, each with equipment for the accurate control of heat and moisture. Some of these can reproduce atmospheric conditions that run the gamut from the moist, hot subtropics to the crisp, cold arctic blasts. Subzero changes can be simulated, or given conditions can be maintained without variation over long periods.

Only by such custom-made ultimate tests can the Bell System be assured that its facilities will meet the widely varying requirements of their use service.

Cucumber Long Delicacy

De Candolle says that cucumbers were originally from the East Indies, but other botanists ascribe them to Asia and Egypt. Literature proves them to be more than 3,000 years old in Asia, and it is known that they were brought into China 140 B. C. They were known to the Greeks and Romans and were mentioned by Pliny, who says that they were grown in Africa, and that they were such a favorite with Emperor Tiberius that he had them daily on his table. Charlemagne ordered them planted on his estate in the Ninth century, and they were grown by Columbus in Haiti in 1494. Capt. John Smith mentions them as being cultivated in Virginia in 1584.

DEATH OF MRS. FRANK NOBLE

RESIDENT OF THIS REGION MORE THAN 50 YEARS

Death came suddenly to Mrs. Jennie B. Noble, seventy-three years old, wife of Frank Noble, late Thursday night, her passing being caused by a chronic heart ailment of long standing.

Her maiden name was Jennie B. Payton, the daughter of her birth, March 5, 1858 at Louisville, Kentucky, where she lived until 1880, when with her parents and other family members she came to Michigan, locating on a farm in South Arm township. In 1882 she was united in marriage with Wm. Smith, who passed away twenty-three years later, leaving two sons, Swayne Smith, Ray Smith and one daughter, Clara, now Mrs. Clara Hammond, of East Jordan, all of whom with her husband, Frank Noble, are her survivors. She is also survived by one sister, Mrs. Ella Landes of Chicago, and one brother, D. S. Payton, of Charlevoix. The son Swayne Smith resides in Charlevoix and Ray Smith is a resident of Traverse City.

Mrs. Noble has resided continuously for more than a half century of time, either in South Arm township or Charlevoix, for the last few years in this city, where she is most favorably spoken of as a sincere Christian, splendid neighbor and a kind and thoughtful friend.

Her health in recent years, and over a long period of time has gradually declined until the end came peacefully and unexpectedly Thursday night.

Funeral services was held at the Noble residence, 1206 Bridge Street, Saturday afternoon, with pastor, Rev. W. H. Roach of the Baptist society officiating.

Virginia Soliman, cashier at the local telephone exchange is taken suddenly ill Tuesday night with an diagnosed as acute appendicitis. Later in the day she entered the local hospital where an operation followed. At this time she is as comfortable as can be expected, and with fair to making quite speedy recovery reported from the trouble.

Carl Hines of Detroit, is visiting his parents and other Charlevoix friends. He arrived here Sunday and is a Charlevoix visitor for two weeks

SOUSA TO DIRECT MASSED BANDS NEXT SUNDAY

John Philip Sousa, famous band master, arrives at Interlochen on Thursday, July 23, to complete preliminals for the Massed Band concert which will be a memorable event for northern Michigan on Sunday evening Sunday, Mr. Sousa, who comes for his second annual visit, has been a world-wide figure in the musical life of one nation for the past quarter of a century, having in his long and varied career been conductor of the Marine Band in Washington, an organization which he took from near obscurity and made into an historic one in the world war Sousa added to his fame by organizing and directing the symphonies and marvelous bands at Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

Band rehearsals at the Bowl have been intensifying each day under Albert Austin Harding, conductor of the National High School Band, in anticipation of Mr. Sousa's arrival and the concert on Sunday afternoon when the camp group is to be augmented by hundreds of players from every part of Michigan and adjacent states who assemble at organizations which is unique in community music history. A distinct feature of the program will be the playing of Mr. Sousa's latest March, "Northern Pine," which he has written for and dedicated to the Orchestra and Band Camp.

In the evening Mr. Sousa will be guest conductor for the Orchestra concert. At this time the orchestra will give one entire portion of their program to a group of the finest of the Sousa marches played under the baton of the eminent composer and conductor himself.

Camping facilities are available in the State Park which adjoins the National High School Orchestra and Band Camp and a splendid restaurant on the Camp grounds, in addition to the hotel, affords conveniences for those who desire to come, either for the week-end or for the day.

EIGHTEEN MONTHS SAYS JUDGE GILBERT TO LAW VIOLATOR

Eighteen months at the Jackson State Prison was the sentence imposed against William Pearl after a plea of guilty was entered by the defendant for violation of the liquor law. The sentence was imposed at a special session held early this week.

This was not Pearl's first appearance in Judge Gilbert's court as the calendar will show if anyone cares to examine the same. Mr. Pearl is 78 years old and a Charlevoix citizen of long standing.

FATHER AND SON DROWNED SATURDAY

TRAGEDY OCCURS IN SOUTH ARM; BODIES RECOVERED

Two persons, Ray Hammond and his son seven year old son, Jack met death by drowning in the waters of South Arm Saturday afternoon as the father attempted over the distance back into the deep water of the lake. Their bodies were recovered several hours later by members of the Charlevoix coast guard crew who were called to the scene, that of the two sons home before the accident after which the search was continued two hours longer before the last body was recovered. A daughter who was in the lake at the time, due to the forethought of her father, who shoved her to a point of safety escaped drowning.

This makes a total of three lives lost during the past few days in Lake Charlevoix and the South Arm of the Lake, the first being at Boyne City about two weeks earlier, when Albert Howard, seventeen years old was the victim.

FIVE ARE INJURED AS CAR HITS TREE

DRIVER FAILS TO MAKE TURN IN BOYNE CITY

Driving down a long grade and at top speed resulted in the most serious accident in Boyne City, where on the day night when a car carrying five young people, failed to negotiate a turn in Boyne City, where the Boyne Falls road, State Trunk Line No. 75 connects with Water Street, just east of the Wolverine hotel, left the cement driveway and crashed into a large shade tree.

The occupants of the car at the time of the crash were, Alvin Durance of Charlevoix, Basil Gilmore and Kenneth Fulmer of Lake Orion, Margaret Velzie and Mary Meadows of Mancelona. Kenneth Fulmer, driver of the car and Alvin Durance escaped serious injury although they received numerous cuts and bruises as also did Mary Meadows. The two others were less fortunate. Margaret Velzie received many cuts, bruises and also suffered a broken collar bone and Basil Gilmore, the most seriously injured, suffering a severe cuts and bruises and concussion of the brain.

Mr. H. H. Hinkley, representative in the state legislature, Emmet county, city of Petoskey, accompanied by Mrs. Hinckley, was a Charlevoix visitor Thursday afternoon.

Mrs. L. D. Coulter, who was a guest of her cousin, Mrs. Irv A. Adams, for two weeks returned to Detroit Saturday.

J. I. Quamby, landscape artist of Lansing, spent Thursday in Charlevoix, Monday he explained his visit to St. James, where for the month or longer, he will make sketches of Beaver Island scenes.

"DADDY LONG LEGS" HERE SUNDAY AND MONDAY

In a role which is said to be even more delightful and better suited to her charm and talent than her "Janie" of "Seventh Heaven", Janet Gaynor in the screen of the Palace Theatre Sunday and Monday in "Daddy Long Legs." And with her comes another favorite, Warner Baxter, who plays the title role in this wistful Fox romance, which Alfred Santell directed.

FOURTH ANNUAL GUERNSEY SHOW AND PICNIC

Twenty-Five Head of Fine Cattle To Be Exhibited July 29

All dairymen are cordially invited by the Charlevoix County Guernsey Breeder's Association to attend their Fourth Annual Guernsey Show and Picnic to be held at East Jordan, Wednesday, July 29.

This occasion it the leading dairy event of the year, and a fine program is in store for all farmers interested in dairy development and progress. The Guernsey Breeder's Association is very anxious to entertain you and have you see the exhibit of fine Guernseys.

Each year close to thirty of the best quality Guernseys in the countryseve shown and judged, and this year fully as many will be on display. Ribbons will be awarded the winners in the various age class.

Mr. W. H. Burrington, State Guernsey Field Man, will again be with us and discuss topics of vital interest to all owners of Guernseys.

Another feature will be the awarding of diplomas to dairymen who have had bright records over three hundred pounds of butter fat. Those are awarded by the National Dairy Union in recognition of this splendid achievement.

Then, we are glad to announce that two boys representing our 4-H Dairy Club Program will give a demonstration.

A picnic dinner in East Jordan Tourist Park will be enjoyed at the noon hour with free coffee furnished by the Association. The program will begin promptly at 1:00o fast time on the grounds. Features will be the address by W. B. Burrington, demonstration by two Dairy Club Members, awarding of diplomas to our leading dairymen, and the judging of nearly thirty head of our leading Guernseys in the County.

No matter what breed of cattle you are interested in we are very hopeful that you will bring your family as well as a well-filled lunch basket and spend the day with us. Let us make this a real county Dairy Day's Picnic and the most successful ever to be held. Remember Wednesday July 29, is the day and date, and the program takes place at the East Jordan Tourist Park. Invite your friends and neighbors to be present.

Yours very truly,
H. C. Mellenkamp,
Co. Agr'l Agent

WOMAN'S BEST-SELLER NOVEL BECOMES NEW MOVIE SUCCESS

Gary Cooper and Carole Lombard Star in Rinehart Story

Few modern writers have more "best-sellers" to their credit than Mary Roberts Rinehart, whose recent novel "Lost Ecstasy," now comes to the Palace theatre screen Friday and Saturday of this week, under the title "I Take This Woman."

"Lost Ecstasy" had already equalled the selling success of many Mrs. Rinehart's best-known books when Paramount contracted for the moving picture rights.

"I Take This Woman," the screen version of the well-liked story, features Gary Cooper and Carole Lombard in its cast. The drama involves a petted child of wealth, Carole Lombard, whose scare-line escapades have involved her father in trouble and scandal. Shipped off to the family ranch in Wyoming for punishment, she meets, flirts with, and unthinkingly marries Gary Cooper, a range rider. Then the spoiled darling learns something about life, on a barren little ranch. The marriage runs its course, but the wilful bride, with the road opened for her escape, finds that she has found herself in her strange husband with ties stronger than any man-made law.

Gary Lombard, a serialization of whose auto-biography has just been completed in Good Housekeeping, is one of America's foremost women novelists. The daring directness of this story, "I Take This Woman", is typical of her action-full style. The locale, shifting as it does, between fashionable, dare-devil New York and the wild country of the west and back again, adds delightful variety to the picture.

The two leading characters, played by Cooper and Miss Lombard, are real. Each has very human faults, but the man wins sympathy and admiration for his strength, the girl for her loyalty and sportsmanship. In this case the course of true love runs any thing but smoothly, and flaming, fiery, sometimes humorous, drama results.

AUXILIARY MEET NEXT FRIDAY

SPECIAL LEGION MEETING ON SATURDAY NIGHT

There will be a special meeting of the Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226, American Legion, at the hall next Saturday evening at seven thirty o'clock to arrange details for the circus which will show on the Legion grounds Sunday afternoon and evening. All members should be present.

Next Tuesday night is annual election of officers and a full turnout is required in order that the will of the post may be completely expressed in its choice of officers for the coming year.

The Ladies' Auxiliary will meet Friday evening at the Legion quarters. Any mother, wife, daughter or sister of a Legionnaire is eligible to membership and can become a charter member of this organization any time between now and August 16, 1931.

COAST GUARD RESCUES WOMAN - ON DRY LAND

SUMMER RESIDENT HAS UNUSUAL EXPERIENCE

Mrs. Harris Hyman, summer resident, spent several lonesome hours Saturday night in the timber lands and along the shore line near Orchard Bay farm where she wandered after the machine in which she was taking a drive stalled on the highway.

While her chauffeur was making necessary repairs she took a walk during which she became confused, lost, and could not find her way back to the highway. Darkness came after which she took a philosophical view of the situation making the best of a bad predicament, and finally reached the conclusion that friends would be notified, a searching party organized and her course would be quickly accomplished.

Men were soon engaged in the search along the tract of land lying between the highway and shore line, while members of the local coast guard crew took up the work near and along the beach finding Mrs. Harris near the shore soon after midnight, returning her to her home an hour or two later.

It made for something of a thrilling adventure for Mrs. Harris, but such an one as she will not care to indulge in at any future time, even though the weather conditions are most favorable as it was on the evening of her adventure.

MAY GET FLAGS FOR SOLDIERS SERVICES

Local Postmaster To Keep Supply Of Flags On Hand

Any ex-service man or woman who served as army nurses between April 21, 1898 and Feb. 2, 1901.

The flag, 5x9 1-2 feet, may be obtained by placing order with Mr. Weaver or any other county seat postmaster, the nearest United States veterans hospital, regional office, national home or other field station of the Veterans' administration.

Application must be made by the head of kin on forms provided by the postmaster or other authority, or by the person responsible for the burial or by a representative of a welfare or service organization or other person having knowledge of the facts. Proof of service by way of discharge certificate is requisite.

In case the flag cannot be obtained from the regular sources in time for the burial, the government will allow $9 through reimbursement.

Postmaster Weaver will keep on hand a supply of flags. Each time there is a withdrawal a new flag or new flags will be supplied.

Card of Thanks.

Our deep appreciation is keenly tendered to our many friends and neighbors for their helpful acts and expressions of sympathy in our recent sad bereavement.

ANNUAL FIELD DAY ON DEMONSTRATION FARM NEAR HOWARD CITY

Over Two Thousand People Were In Attendance Last Field Day

Friday, August 7, is the day set for the Annual Field Day at the Pennsylvania Railroad Demonstration Farm on U. S. 131, two miles north of Howard City, as announced by B. C. Hagerman, the Railroad's Agricultural Agent, who for the past several years has been in charge of this farm, which is proving that if the lighter types of soils are properly understood and managed accordingly they can be made to produce crops profitably. To the thousands of farmer's who have visited this farm and seen the various crops giving unstinted testimony in favor of the "Keystone Rotation", the cropping program used on the farm, merely an announcement as to the date of the annual Field Day is all that is necessary to warrant a large crowd. Over two thousand people attended the last Field Day.

Many features connected with the farming operations will be of great interest to all farmers. First of these is a very interesting irrigation experiment that has been conducted. The results of this project will be announced at the Field Day. Another interesting demonstration has been that of the use of mulch paper in the strawberry garden at the Demonstration Farm which will be open for your inspection.

A very profitable flock of white leghorn hens have made a profit during the past year in spite of the low prices of eggs. While it is only a farm flock they have obtained good breeding with culling, proper feeding, and better housing.

You will see the crop demonstrations that are always a feature of the Visitor's Day The internationally famous "Potash Page" demonstration is still showing as plain as ever.

Then, again, a fine herd of Guernsey cows will be displayed at the Field Day. While this is an ordinary farm herd from the use of a well-bred sire and by Cow Testing Association's efforts they have a real producing herd of cows.

Another feature of the "Still-Truck" from the Michigan State College. On this truck you will see the results of hundreds of soils and crops experiments put on in Michigan and other states.

Space does not permit giving any more detail, but if you want to spend a very pleasant and profitable day attend the Annual Field Day on August 7.

Very truly Yours,

GIRL'S COLLEGE DIARY PICTURED IN TRUE DETAIL

"Confessions of a Co-Ed" Reveals Real Inside Story

The first American college story authentic in all its details, "Confessions of a Co-Ed," has been brought to the screen by Paramount and will open a two day showing at the Palace theatre, starting Tuesday next.

"Confessions of a Co-Ed," based on the intimate facts in the day-to-day diary of an anonymous co-ed, whose own highly dramatic and intensely emotional experiences reflect the thoughts and actions of all resident college youths, deals with one of the most vital and interesting phases of present-day life. In it are pictured the joys, the rivalries, the jealousies and love affairs of young men and beautiful girls, many of them away from home, on their own" for the first time in their lives.

Acted by two interesting young college men, Phillips Holmes and Norman Foster, and a young stage star who has risen rapidly to movie prominence, Sylvia Sidney in the featured roles, "Confessions of a Co-Ed" is college life as it is lived. Sylvia Sidney, a freshman, is rushed by a prominent sorority and by two handsome men, Holmes and Foster, during her first college days. Swept off her feet by Holmes' wooing, she fails to notice the jealousy of Vaseen (Holmes') sorority sister. She regrets the act too late.

THREE COTTAGES ARE DEST

THE SOLDIER'S MEDAL

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HIS coming about "Twice hath its creation been bestowed upon war how taken on a new meaning since the establishment of a new award. This is the Soldier's medal and under the provision of an act of congress, approved June 2, 1926, one of these medals will be presented to the President, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, but not in the name of congress, to any person who, while serving in any capacity with the United States army shall distinguish himself or herself by bravery not involving actual conflict with an enemy.

Under the provisions of the act a Soldier's medal may not be awarded for acts performed prior to July 2, 1926. There is a further requirement, still a recommendation, must have been made within two years of the act of heroism, made the basis of the recommendation, and that an award if made must be approved within three years of the day of an act of heroism.

Only one Soldier's medal, like our other awards for valor and distinction, will be issued to any one person, but for each succeeding deed or act sufficient to warrant the award of the Soldier's medal, an oak leaf cluster will be authorized for pinending to the medal's ribbon. According to the secretary of war, the Soldier's medal will rank fourth in precedence among the several medals awarded for valor and distinction.

The design approved by the secretary of war early this year was submitted by Inland Empire of New York city. It was selected from among several by the committee of award, and as to its point of design meets the approval of the country's highest tribunals in this field of art.

The design in general in contour and the medals are struck off from bronze. The reverse illustration is plain, disclosing, standing on a fasces between two groups of stars. The reverse bears the shield between two sprays of laurel, with the inscription, "Soldier's Medal For Valor." The medal is suspended from a ribbon of light blue, with thirteen alternate red and white stripes.

The following classes of persons, according to the War department, are eligible for the medal, if performing acts of heroism subsequent to July 2, 1926: All members of the United States army; all members of the National Guard and the federal service and of the ununited reserves, including the officer's reserve corps and the enlisted reserve corps, not in active duty, when the circumstances directly related to their attendance on service drills; all members of civilian clubs of United States navy and marine corps while serving with the army; all members of the reserve forces of the military, naval and air forces of foreign governments while serving with the army of the United States. Civilians are not eligible for the award of the Soldier's medal.

Distribution of the Soldier's medal was begun in April of this year shortly after the design of it was approved by the army authorities, and first of these medals had been awarded up to that time, 27 of which had been received by the adjutant general of the army from the quartermaster general for forwarding to their winners. Until the issue of the medal began the quartermaster corps, certificates were issued in lieu of the medal and then presented to the winners. The 27 medals were sent to the army area commanders or the officer or soldier for formal presentation with suitable ceremonies.

The first ceremony at which a medal was presented was held in April of this year shortly after the design of it was approved by the secretary of war. Eight

ARKANSAS STAGES A COME-BACK

Arkansas has staged a magnificent come-back after the disaster of drouth and flood, of finance and politics, which stirred the sympathy of the Nation a year or so ago. It has been some time since Senators Robinson and Caraway have found it necessary to wring tears from the eyes of the public by picturing the woes of their State.

The people of Arkansas have met the Federal Government halfway and more than half-way in the work of rehabilitation, as might be expected of a people who don't aim to be beholden. This is the report brought back by a skilled and impartial observer, Walter Davenport who as associate editor of Collier's Weekly has been investigating the present status of the go in Arkansas.

Among the first persons he met out there was Mr. Joe Bob Stone whome he found sitting on the narrow porch of his two-room residence in Clark County, combing his whiskers with the stem of his corncob pipe and rolling gently in a rocking chair. For companions Mr. Stone had four large hound dogs, all of them far gone in sprawling sleep.

"Don't pay no attention to the politicians or the preachers or the lawyers," he advised. "The politicians will tell you every thing's all right, which it ain't. The preachers will tell you everything's all wrong, which ain't so neither. The lawyers will say we would be all right if there wasn't any politicians and preachers, which is only partly true."

Mr. Davenport tried diligently to follow Mr. Stone's advice without complete success. But he found plenty of evidence that Arkansas had recovered from her "miseries," and that for once the citizens have learned that their State is worth exploitation by herself. There is very few things her rich lowlands and lovely hills don't contain. But heretofore trouble has centered in her willingness to boast of her diamond mines, her timber, her apple orchards, her peaches and rice and melons,—and leave most of the economic problems now facing the country in the order of importance.

Prohibition came first, followed by administration of justice, lawlessness, unemployment, crime, world court, and taxation. This would seem to indicate that the legislative problem, in one phase or another, principally engages the public attention, with the business depression and the tax situation as runnerup.

Of particular interest is the fact that the power issue—now being boomed in many states —was an issue—ran. It came fortieth, far behind child welfare, reduction of armaments, socialism, international relations, conservation of national reserves and similar issues which usually receive much less attention. Apparently that part of the public which takes a genuine interest in government has not been swayed by the war against the electric utilities.

All in all, the survey is encouraging. Prohibition, crime, the world court and taxation are no matter what side one may take, real issues, of greater significance. On their solution depends, to a large degree, the future of this nation. It might be well for the office-seekers to take a hint, and go into their campaigns with definite programs for disposing of bones near at the heart of the thinking.

HERES A TAX THAT CAN BE REDUCED

In 1930 the American people, through payment of insurance premiums, were taxed to meet losses caused by fire amounting to $499,700,000. That is the highest total since 1926. In spite of much educational effort to teach caution; in spite of the great improvement in building materials and the increasingly rigid regulation of construction; in spite of better equipment for fighting fires, carelessness and crime continues to take an enormus toll through the form of destruction.

That crime plays an important part in fire losses may be judged from the fact that there were more than 1,500 arrests for arson in 1930, an increase over the preceding year of 70 per cent. Incendiary fires are more frequent in bad times than in good times, and the depression, no doubt, accounts for a large share of the alarming increase. The total convictions approximated only 400, or less than one-third of the number of persons arrested. A great comservatism in the underwriting of risks and a stronger emphasis on the character qualification of the insured seem to be suggested as desirable. Meanwhile the agencies of the law may be exhorted justly in this, as in other fields, to sterner efforts in discouragement of criminals.

Still, for the most part, the reduction of tax on property owners resulting from fire losses lie in the hands of the Americans people. By developing a sense of responsibility and by training themselves to be careful they can lessen appreciable the heavy tribute which fires levy upon the country's productive forces.—FROM THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

WILL MEN WEAR WASHABLE TUNICS?

Irving Cobb recently sounded a battle cry which should find an echo in every masculine heart. "Gentlemen, let's dress up fancy!" he said, and proceeded to describe some dress reform for the male sex.

Even the most aggressively male man has to concede the superior advantages of feminine summer-time apparel which can be worn once or twice with cool comfort and then washed and freshened. But the hero who will make equally sensible clothing acceptable to the timid masculine world has not yet appeared. Altho most men will suffer in the conventional garb of heavy, drab suiting few of whom have the courage to do anything about it.

Cobb advocates the Russian tunic made of cool, washable cotton linen, or silk. "With its low collar, a side—closing down the right front, and a belt, it would eliminate the wearing of a coat and waistcoat, shirt and collar, tie and links, thus at one stroke sweeping away a whole battery of his present sartorian antiquities and bothements," he argues.

The idea is inviting, but seems to need a Prince of Wales to put it over. Irvin Cobb has contributed a basically sound study and slogan. It's up to men in general to popularize it. Gentlemen let's dress up fancy—and sensible!

TAXATION AND CONFISCATION

There is a point where taxation becomes confiscation—when it goes beyond what the people can reasonably pay.

Many American communities are fast reaching this point. Tax rates have a hundred per cent or more in a comparatively few years. A multitude of special taxes are being levied. Class taxation has become commonplace. Both businesses and individuals find the tax collector a barrier in the way of industrial expansion and personal prosperity.

A condition such as this cannot long continue without placing the nation in a position from which it may take years to recover. The present spectacle of debt-ridden European nations should be a warning to public officials to do everything in their power to promote government efficiency, limit its operations to fundamental governmental duties, and keep expenses down.

Maybe the Democrats are talking so loudly and rapidly about the tariff in order to keep the minds of some of their leaders off the liquor question.

BANKERS SUGGEST BANKING REFORMS

Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association Recommends Aids to Progress in Banking Business.

FOLLOWING a nation-wide survey of banking conditions and opinion among bankers, the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association has made the following recommendation for banking betterment:

"Under the category of improved bank management specific improvements we might summarize are:

"(1) Liquidation or consolidation of banks where changed local economic conditions render this desirable;

"(2) Wider affiliation among state banks with the Federal Reserve System;

"(3) Development of limited branch banking where economic conditions and legal authority make this expedient;

"(4) A more general application of the theory and practice of modern conservatism;

"(5) Avoidance by banks of undue aggressive morals to increase their own profits by unwarranted credit to local business in order to increase their own local power;

"(7) Cooperation among bankers in local communities, through city, county or regional clearinghouses so as to eliminate unsually beneficial conditions and practices.

"(8) The insistence upon higher educational standards and qualifications among employees, especially those to be trusted with executive duties.

Legislative Measures Proposed

"There are some external measures, saving measures legislative and supervisory those, that we also believe would help strengthen banking. Among these are:

"(1) The broadening in the states of branch banking laws where conditions warrant an extension of this type of banking service to the public.

"(2) The establishment of sound minimum capital funds under which banks will be required to operate which would be materially higher than now prevails in most states, specifically we believe that the minimum capital with which any new bank shall be chartered, whether state or national, should be at least $25,000;

"(3) The provision of funds and regulations to keep the official staffs of all supervisory departments up to a level of ability and integrity that will universally inspire confidence among bankers whose activities they are supervised to review, and will supply real added defenses to the public interests they are appointed to protect.

"(4) in connection with the policies of bank chartering departments, we would recommend that, even to a greater extent than is now the practice, the greatest care and consideration should be exercised in granting new charters, so as to guard against overbanking or the launching of new banks by unqualified persons, which have doubtless been serious factors in the bank failure situation in the past.

"(5) Also, referring to Federal Reserve practice not requiring legislation, we believe that the Federal Reserve Banks should exercise more freely their rights to examine banks and use their discretionary power to refuse rediscount facilities to banks indulging in objectionable banking methods."

Banker-Farmer Plan

An editorial in Southern Cultivator says: "Favorable comment is being made upon the wisdom and promised results of the farmer-banker agricultural program in Georgia. Industrial leaders and politicians, noting that 116 of the 161 counties in the state have pledged prosecution of the "live-at-home" farm reform, are regarding the working out of the plan this year as of more interest to American farmers than any developments of the Soviet five-year plan in Russia. Agricultural actuaries are of the opinion that if Georgia farmers, backed by our cooperating bankers and supply men, demonstrate the expected economies and profits of this home-support plan, it will quickly become a contagion spreading all over the agricultural areas of the nation. It will be the writing of a new 'declaration of independence' for the individualist farmers of the country, putting them upon solid terms of credit and prosperity without need of recourse to federal or state financial relief measures. The man of the soil who lives year in and year out on his own 'row' will stand up in his community as an economic freeman, making his own terms with the world of finance and trade."

A meeting of farmers, bankers, and newspaper men of St. Croix County, Wisconsin, recently organized a drive to promote the growing of alfalfa in such quantity as to save the dairyman the expense of commercial feed, and insure greater dairy profits. It is planned in this campaign to have within the next three years, at least one acre of alfalfa produced for each dairy cow in the county, or a total of about 40,000 acres.

An illustration of the art of playing safe comes from Kansas City, where a tiptop lunche room customer casually asked the proprietor whether he would fight if someone held him up, and received this reply: "No; sir; I'd put up my hands." The customer then said, "That's sensible; stick 'em up," and robbed the restaurant man of $7.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litchert

A moderately hopeful view of the last half of the year is taken by the economic survey of the conservative Standard Statistics that "it is our opinion that the basis is being laid for an extended period of recovery." It sets out that the recent moratorium plan of President Hoover has created a "definite assurance that a latent buying power of tremendous proportions existed just beneath the exterior of frab pessimism of the past few months. The survey adds that little can be expected in the way of universal advance during the third quarter now beginning, but adds that the fourth quarter of the year "will show definite expansion over the third quarter, while the drastic decline of late 1930 will admit of favorable comparison (with the final quarter of last year) in a majority of individual instances."

All of which may be taken as a fair forecast of the situation, and one not at all discouraging. It must be evident, however, to anyone who will pause to think for a moment, that even if business perks up during the last half of the year much faster than now seems likely, a great deal of relief work will be necessary, during the coming winter. The season of the year's deepest depression will not disappear in the space of two or three months after the healing period has set in.

It is logical to anticipate, therefore, that no matter how quickly we get back on the road to normacy, a great deal of relief will be necessary during the coming winter. And it is highly encouraging to note that the old political and party qualifications among employees, especially those to be trusted with executive duties.

"(1) The broadening in the states of branch banking laws where conditions warrant an extension of this type of banking service to the public.

"The Great Wilbo," a living person shot through space with violent velocity from the mouth of a monster cannon, will be an extraordinary feature of the Hagenbeck-Wallace Circus when this famous show comes to this section within a few days. Wilbo's death-defying deed is the sensation of two continents. This great act was brought to America this season for exclusive presentation by Hagenbeck-Wallace.

Hagenbeck-Wallace will offer a great number of thrilling displays, including Clyde Beatty and a savage sea ferocious group of over 35 African lions and Siberian and Bengal tigers. Another great will animal trainer will be offered by Ago Christiansen, famous European subjugator.

"The Golden Orient," a glittering and bewildering spectacle of magnificence, will open the lengthy program.

Mr. Sanden says: "Here's what for want of a better term he calls "poetry." He also writes town paper sketches intended for humor. In a recent letter to his paper he aired his humorous proclivities at the expense of the truth, in stating that the Charlevoix lodge needs refuses to swing the lodge by the eardrum. Mr. Smiley may imagine that pranks and humorists are licensed to draw upon their imagination when necessary to make a rhyme or say something funny, but he is neither a poet nor a humorist, hence, a fib from him is a fib. The lodge-leader, who is a decent man, is very mad at the eccentric young man from Kalamazoo.

The only respectable drive which we have seen in this city is the one to the cemetery, and it is a disgracefully poor conclusion. Our own people, as well as strangers, are compelled to travel repaired, and we hope the supervisor of highways will see that it is done.

The Beaver Island boys celebrated the 4th in the usual way. The principal race was the boating attraction, and there were seven entries. Capt. Ed. Bedford took the lead which he kept to the close, winning first prize, a silver watch. Smith came in a few rods behind, winning second prize, a silver tea pitcher. Handy Hannah, who left the harbor last, in an Indian lone manned and made by Indians, came next, winning third prize, a boat compass. Dan Malloy took fourth prize, a nickel plated rock. Tom McNally won fifth prize, a silver butter dish. Israel Gloat took sixth prize, silver plated castor.

Byron W. Miller, of this village, left town Thursday on the Fountain City for Buffalo and from thence he goes to his old home in St. Lawrence County, N. Y. He looks rosy and recreation. His many friends here hope he has thus retrieve improved in health and spirits.

THE CHICAGO RESORT

Its Grounds Near The Village—The Club House

The Chicago Resort Association, made up of leading business men of Chicago, last year purchased 40 acres of land just across the harbor from this village, at the foot of Pine Lake, for the purpose of establishing thereon a retreat by which during the heated term, they could take their families and enjoy the cool breezes and beautiful scenery of Lake Michigan and Pine Lake.

Even the short time that has elapsed has abundantly proven the wisdom of their choice of location, for a more beautiful spot could not have been found upon the shores of the Great Lakes.

The Club House, which has but recently been opened occupies a commanding location upon the site, fronting 165 feet on Pine Lake, and 65 feet toward Charlevoix and Lake Michigan. It has large, high, airy rooms, broad halls and deep verandas above and below enriching the house its entire frontage, and the comfort that is displayed upon them in a cool summer evening, with the large arm-chairs occupied by the guests, the dancing couchers, is something to be envied.

A view across above the angle of the bay and lake to the north shore that is beyond our powers of description. Away up Pine Lake can be seen Bogus Creek, while just below Round Lake glistens in the sun, with Charlevoix affording a beautiful background. Its steamers can be seen. Yet lift your eye and the broad Lake Michigan stretches away before the islands and from it comes a refreshing breeze, cooling your heated flesh, and driving away your headache with a magic skin to that of mesmerism.

Right below, over the brow of a terrace, a layon setting in from Round Lake affords a convenient place for the mooring of sundry row boats in use by the resorters, while across the bayou an island extends northward to within a stone's throw of the other resort grounds. This island will be transformed into a park for all.

The Club House contains 27 sleeping rooms, a ladies' sitting room, containing a superb Hallett & Davis piano, a gent's club room, a large dining room, and a kitchen apartment abounding to all the modern improvements of the art of cooking. The house has water pipes running to every room, and a large hand force pump to supply the water. A windmill will be erected next season to force water into the various parts of the house.

L. E Hildreth is clerk and bookkeeper and Frank Owens is steward. The tables are supplied with everything that the Chicago or Charlevoix markets afford, and comfort, coolness and contentment is pictured upon the face of every resorter, and well it may.

Miss A. C. Bridge (nee Celia Nesbitt) of Wolverine, Wis., is here visiting her parents.

Miss Ida Caudell, of East Haven, is here visiting her sister and her cousins and her aunts, the Paxon, Millers and Fankboys.

Rev. W. E. McLennan, late of the city of Mexico, arrived Sunday, from Chicago, and will preach for the Congregational church next Sabbath.

The yacht Marion, Capt. Wm. Crowe, has been out in Big Traverse Bay the past week with the following party on board: E. A. Strehlow, wife and son, Miss A. A. Fox and wife, and Gen. W. Miller, wife and daughters. Sterling Hall was also out on the Mission, which enjoys the distinction of being Mr. Millers' birthplace.

A Petoskey farm fell dead of fright on seeing an elephant in a circus procession Saturday.

Mr Bert Sanden of Kalamazoo enough a young man well known as Sure publishes at Gladstone, an alleged newspaper called Smiley's enterprise. Mr. Sanden says: "Here's what for want of a better term he calls "poetry." He also writes town paper sketches intended for humor. In a recent letter to his paper he aired his humorous proclivities at the expense of the truth, in stating that the Charlevoix lodge needs refuses to swing the lodge by the eardrum. Mr. Smiley may imagine that pranks and humorists are licensed to draw upon their imagination when necessary to make a rhyme or say something funny, but he is neither a poet nor a humorist, hence, a fib from him is a fib. The lodge-leader, who is a decent man, is very mad at the eccentric young man from Kalamazoo.

The annual meeting of the Charlevoix Summer Resort Association was held yesterday. The reporting of the Board were elected for the ensuing year: President, H. B. Hoyville, Vice Press; E. A. Gilbert, Texas. I. D. Bisley, Secty.; E. B. Bixby, Directors; O. M. Allen, H. F. Parmelee, H. B. Everard, F. M. Hodge and Dallas Bradelman.

The only respectable drive which we have seen in this city is the one to the cemetery, and it is a disgracefully poor conclusion. Our own people, as well as strangers, are compelled to travel repaired, and we hope the supervisor of highways will see that it is done.

The Beaver Island boys celebrated the 4th in the usual way. The principal race was the boating attraction, and there were seven entries. Capt. Ed. Bedford took the lead which he kept to the close, winning first prize, a silver watch. Smith came in a few rods behind, winning second prize, a silver tea pitcher. Handy Hannah, who left the harbor last, in an Indian lone manned and made by Indians, came next, winning third prize, a boat compass. Dan Malloy took fourth prize, a nickel plated rock. Tom McNally won fifth prize, a silver butter dish. Israel Gloat took sixth prize, silver plated castor.

Byron W. Miller, of this village, left town Thursday on the Fountain City for Buffalo and from thence he goes to his old home in St. Lawrence

The Cemetery—The work done by Samuel M. See, Esq., on the burying ground has been accepted by the township board. Mr See has done the work well, and the Board are well pleased.

Arrived—Capt. Walter Clifford of the 7th Infantry, arrived by the Empire State on Sunday last, from the west. He has six months leave of absence, and will likely spend the most of the time in our village. His company is established in Montana Territory.

Visit to the Country—On Monday afternoon last we accepted an invitation from Capt. Clifford to visit his farm in the township of Marion. The Captain has an improvement of nearly thirty acres, and all in cross which are looking well. We also visited the place of Mr. John Newman. Mr. Newman has a homelike place. He crops look well.

Huge Cooking Utensils of Pioneer Households

Cooking vessels of long ago lent stout testimony to the largeness of the pioneer family. Apple butter was made in a copper kettle as big as a tub and stirred with a crook, measuring pecks with holes in it. Woolen sausage mills, turned by a creaky crank, make the odds and ends of bags palatable. Huge copper round kettles contained two feet in diameter. Some of the Jewish cooking utensils brought over by the first Russian emigrants have been preserved for the edification of modern housewives, accustomed to paper pots in pastel colors. The two-lined flocks of seventy-five years ago were not used for eating but for spinning food out of the community pot in the center of the table. As soon as you fenced your portion onto your plate, the knife was used for bridging the distance between plate and mouth, much were the table manners of our most early Indianapolis sisters.

A similar, each of the cook pots in the kitchen, for storing powdered sugar on your fund, was used by our forefathers for sprinkling sand on letters to dry fresh ink. The wonder of blotting paper, which you take for granted now, was then unknown. Breaking items shows that vanity is a modern trend. Efficient housewives of long ago have left behind a number of double rolling wheels that enabled them to take the fire off the wheel with both hands.

All of the interesting objects just described, and many others, are owned by a local citizen who has spent the last twenty-five years in collecting them. In coming from farmhouse to farmhouse he found innumerable others locked away in old corners which, when displayed together, united remarkably an interesting pioneer environment.—Indianapolis News.

Birds Pay Tribute to Singer's Golden Voice

Nora Bayes, the Polish operatic star, is a woman of Francis, one of her most regular and devoted audiences consisting of birds. She made a concert in 1926, being visible for a month. Previous visits had been noted in 1856, 1531 and 1607. Halley predicted that it would return once every 76 years. That his calculations were correct is attested by the visitor's appearance in 1759, 1835, and this.

Astronomers are accustomed to the sight of Will Rogers, actor and philosopher, in rather unlikely attire; indeed, Mrs. Rogers said recently Will would be more comfortable in a barrel than he is in formal dress and still looking happy. Never before has he been thus photographed.

Newest United States Cruisers to Have Formidable Deck Protection

Washington.—The last of the ten eight-inch gun 10,000 ton Washington treaty cruisers to be built by the United States under the London treaty will have the most formidable armor deck protection ever built into a vessel of this type. These vessels will have an armor deck skin thick enough to stop the eight-inch gun projectile up to ranges of 20,000 yards.

The sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth eight-inch gun cruisers of this class may have even greater deck protection than the seven building. One element in the navy now fairs giving the vessel an extra deck armor thickness at the rate of speed. The navy high command, however, is undecided in favor retention of the present speed of better than 32 knots an hour.

Every new batch of cruisers built of the eight-inch gun treaty type have been given greater deck and side armor protection than their predecessors. Each batch also has been equipped with a greater number of anti-aircraft weapons. The first vessels were designed for four five-inch gun anti-aircraft weapons. The next group had eight. Now the last nine to be built are to be armed with an increased number of anti-aircraft machine guns.

Playing the Game Through

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

"The water hole on John D. Hocke-feller's private course" is newspaper editorial sarcasm which a new bunker and a twenty-yard carry also offers a chance to learn something important. John D. never used to play it. But the knowledge that the hole was part of the course and that until he played it he would not be playing the game, hurried him and hurried him until he was its master. Now he shoots that hole regularly and likes it.

Getting Her First Sight of a Rose

Miss Marie Morsey, thirty-one years old, of Meechantville, N. J., has just gained her sight after being blind since birth. She is shown seeing the beauty of the rose in the family garden. An operation performed by Dr. George H. Moore gave her the power of sight.

Berlin's Gang Clubs Have Social Caste

Berlin.—Crash forward in the underworld of Berlin draws the attention of law-abiding citizens to the romantic sounding, yet menacing "hodgin" and "gang clubs" of the city.

More like Chinese tongs in their sermons than anything else, yet resembling American gang societies in their significance, and not altogether unlike plain and fashionist lodges, the German underworld "societies" are by no means all of one sort. A social grade prevails, and the lines are pretty finely drawn.

In Berlin there may be honor among thieves, but there is also snobbery, social climbing, and snobbing.

At the top of the scale of the regular "lodging" societies, two of which, the "Immortals" (always true) and the "Hand in Hand" are probably the best known. Wives themselves, for instance, find a celebration, an anniversary of 2,000 can be reunited in.

No mere "tough guys," these—they wear "smokings," as Germans call a tuxedo. For the recent celebration of Immerda's tenth anniversary, the manager of the gang rule figured on selling 8,000 worth of liquor. Not all gangsters set for a big time do with their drinking in a big way.

Those gangsters are the ones who do the better grade work and are safe cracking and jewel robberies. Too far beneath them to be considered capable of ruling "satisfaction," if a matter involving the gangster's code of honor and revenge, are the "Schwerjungen" (brave boys). They are called so in gangdom's lingo because they are always flitting about, from one place to another, but continuing to "do business" from the same set stand," operating stretches of time like the seven musicians. Also, the upper crust thinks that these members of the set point have black characters, dark and distant as can be, because they don't settle by the code.

The rejects bodies around the dark things as auto robberies, store window thefts, purse snatching, pickpocketing, and such small fry activities, just what gives the Berlin police police the most trouble.

The "rejects" are also eight, all, but in a rough-and-ready sort of way, form "cliques," simply for the purpose of increasing their "business" activities by cooperative scouting of their pull through tongues. They are usually young fellows, too much a one from leaving their number low in the past, encouraged to graduate into the upper ranks of the gang groups, and they are eager to get on in their world.

The Amerikaner rejects even steered to a time when he will have accomplished. Now the last stone to be built are to be armed with an increased number of anti-aircraft machine guns.

Yaqui Indians in U. S. Would Return Home

Phoenix, Ariz.—Citizens may lose one of its most colorful Indian reservations if exiles of the Yaqui Indians from Sonora, Mexico, are successful in winning amnesty from the Mexican government for revolutionary activities.

Likewise, the United States may lose the only Indian tribe whose members in this country are officially exiled as aliens.

The Yaquis of Arizona are bronzed, picturesque, and tired of fighting for a livelihood in a highly competitive labor market. They want to go back to their native land.

"What's the use?" he asked when some one inquired why he automatically lost in the room. "I was outclassed and I saw no good reason for wearing myself out."

Not so Wahb. He pushed on until the end, took the applause of the crowd stoically. He believes in playing the game out even if his score is not a good one. Some day he'll be beaten some day if he persists he will come in with the lowest score of it.

Baby Born "Dead" Brought to Life

Milwaukee.—Said by doctors to have been born lifeless, an infant was rushed in a hospital here where the former forced his breath into the baby's lungs. The baby was placed in a "mechanical lung" and, doctors said, its respiration became normal.

The baby was born to Mr. and Mrs. Mario Wisniewski, near Five Points. Dr. E. H. Bongard said every known, artificial means available to induce life. Then Doctor Schultz ordered the father to run with him to his automobile and he sped to Milwaukee with the infant, while the father kept his counsel and the baby's.

Count Cutelli Is Movie "Big Noise"

New York.—The real "big noise" behind the talking pictures has come to light at last. He is Count Cutelli an Italian nobleman, who can lark like a dog, cry like a baby, roar like a lion, crow like a rooster, whistle like a steamboat—in fact, throws hardly a noise that he cannot imitate. He does it by no other mechanical means than his own human attachments—throat, nose, mouth, tongue and teeth.

When, in filming a picture, there's pressure need for a realistic snore or perhaps the howl or a hurricane at sea, or the croak of a frog, likely as not the director will send a hurry call for the count, in his repertoire he claims to have 90 different sounds any one of which he will make to order for the talkies, and lower and reproduce the sounds of wild beasts and birds. He can imitate motorboat, airplane, siren, and an airplane in the distance, stop in, and starting. He imitates fire-works, telegraph, wireless, a speeding automobile, motor cycle, submarine scouters, brakes going into a turn, then galloping off into the distance.

"I began to imitate sounds when I was a small boy in Rome," he says in the American Magazine. "Then I became an acrobat and learned the sounds of the sea. Later I went to war and fought on the Africa front. Then I went on the stage as Futurist, but the fun of it I gave some of my sound imitations, and the audiences seemed to like them. Finally I came to America. Gloria Swanson's manager called me. He had heard my imitations over the radio. It's about me to cry like a baby as I had over the radio. I did so f- a screen test. It registered so successfully that I was engaged. I had found an outlet for my childhood hobby."

Tiny Indian Reservation Home of Famous Chiefs

Miami, Okla.—Within the confines of the Quapaw Indian reservation, the smallest in the United States, are the graves of two famous Indian chiefs, Quapaw and Seneca, and the home of a third, Chief Big Jim, who is still living.

The reservation is only a mile square, and contains 160 acres. Chief Big Jim's home is a log cabin, and he is the only Indian living on the reservation.

Organization in Move for Better Business

The Better Business Bureau is an agency accessible in character that aims to protect the public against merchants who make false or misleading statements in their advertising and against the promoters and sellers of fake stocks and other illegal securities. This organization, which is a unit only in the common purpose and methods of operation, is composed of the National Better Business Bureau and local bureaus in seven hundred cities. Each local bureau is a distinct entity supported by and owing allegiance to only its own community, and it is not a member of or subsidiary to the National Better Business Bureau. The bureaus are financed by merchants, manufacturers and other financial interests. Their activities are confined to investigations by the committees of newspapers and monthly publications. The slogan of the organizer of the national organization is "To inform public confidence in business by promoting fair play in advertising and selling."

Great Aviator Says He Has No "Speed Complex"

The world's greatest salesman of speed, Thor Frank Hedden, has taken a slap at those trying to protect that he is "not a speed fiend." That he does not want to be a fiend, that he is never restless, that he does not race, that he is not either neurotic.

He is, he protests in the American Magazine through a "suppression of speed," why does he work to set records? Because he is convinced that the speed records made in peace-time civilization lies in the accomplishing with speed things can be transferred from one place to another.

But the speed he seeks—so he insists—is not frivol speed, solicited by Freudian symptoms and superficial conditions. It is human speed, attainable by science. It is good, conservative almost homespun speed in wanting it to be never after reckoned, he is merely reaching out after a degree, commencing his explorations, inventions on the topic.

Average Weekly Wages Put at Less Than $25

According to estimates made by Alvin Brockstedt, the average weekly wage in the United States for agricultural workers is less than $25 a week. This is considerably do average wages rise above $30 a week, although within every one of the industrial groups various skilled trades have gained through themselves or through organization a considerably higher status. The union members who run our trains, build our skyscrapers, repair our plumbing, make our suits and dresses, and otherwise, may live groups in all—who with strong organizations have formed wage unions far above the average, include among them scarcely one in eighth of the steel workers, even a smaller number of the automobile workers, a considerable number of business buildings trades and plumbing trades and the small number of the army of stenographers and bookkeepers.—Washington Post.

Good-Natured Man

Here is one who may be termed a good-natured man. He lives in a boarding house, and in his dilapidated of a red-headed woman to whom he had the misfortune. Does the fact that she has married an other make him sore? Not at all. And to say the climax of good nature subsides with dog-like devotion. Not content with the boss who up furnace with and her new husband and supports the entire family, both his own children and the other children's children, without a murmur, and seems to like it. This has been going on for some years, and the family seems to be getting along in contentedness.—Freeman Enterprise.

"You know I got three ages"

"No! how does that happen?" the neighbor said.

"Well, I was six at school, five at home and four on the street car," she replied.

THE STORY

Yancey Cravat, part Cherokee Indian and part Virginia gentleman, arrives in Oklahoma Territory in a rough gathering of the Venture-Seekers. He is accompanied by his wife, Sabra, a beautiful girl from Wichita, Kansas. Yancey is a colorful character, a lover of the West, a dreamer. When the Run started, Yancey was the only man who refused to participate. He said he'd wait and get a claim where there was no rush. Sabra was horrified at this attitude. She longed to be settled in a home and to have the respect of her neighbors. Yancey's unconventional ways shocked her. Yancey went to the Run and staked a claim in the town of Osage. Sabra and the baby went to Wichita to live with Sabra's parents. Yancey practiced law in Osage and published a newspaper, The Wigwam. Sabra was horrified at the way he conducted the paper. Yancey championed the cause of the Indians in his editorials. He defended Isaac Lambshead, a Negro, when he was charged with murder. Yancey's paper was wrecked by a mob. Yancey left Osage and went to Wichita to get Sabra and the baby. Sabra refused to go back to Oklahoma with him. Yancey returned to Osage. Sabra followed him there. Yancey became interested in oil. He made a fortune. Sabra was delighted. She became a social leader. Yancey was bored. He left Sabra and went to Cimarron, New Mexico. Sabra followed him there. THE DOLE THREAT

There are indications that the people of the United States will have on their hands in the coming congress a real battle to prevent the serious threat of some sort of dole legislation. It would seem that the experience of Great Britain and other European nations with this form of so-called unemployment relief would be sufficient to prevent its serious support in America, but it seems that politicians are politicians the world around, and that many dole proposals will be made during the coming winter to switch unemployment relief from the various communities to the federal government.

It is reported that Senator Costigan of Michigan is contemplating a scheme for unemployment relief by which the federal government will go in with the various states in matching dollar for dollar for unemployment insurance, using a plan similar to that now employed in the financing of road construction.

That legislation of this kind would lead sooner or later to the out and out dole is obvious. It is to be remembered that the dole system in Great Britain started very innocently. It had to do only with certain trades in which there was reasonable unemployment. It was on a strict actuarial basis and it was claimed for it by its proponents that it would pay its way. So it did at the start, but the radical politicians got busy in Great Britain just as they get busy in the United States when socialistic legislation is in the offing. The result was that the benefit system was extended and widened until now it applies to the permanently unemployed as well as a serious burden on the taxpayers and the government. Having gotten itself into the mess, Great Britain now sees no immediate way of getting out.

It may be inferred that things would work differently in America but this is to be doubted. Our radical politicians here are even more vociferous and more clever than in Great Britain. But we already have one example in America—and that example in the city of Detroit which has gone in for the dole.

The experience has not been a pleasant one. Not only has the city been crippled financially but there have been charges of irregularity in the distribution of the dole. To quote from a recent editorial in the Chicago Post:

"Detroit has an unemployment relief dole of something like $1,000,000 a month and the strain of the abnormally heavy unemployment of last winter, according to friends of the city administration, produced some little confusion in the welfare department. This, however, scarcely explained the $207,000 embezzlement by a $120 a month employe or some of the charges made by the Ford Motor Company which have developed into a first-class war of words between city and company officials.

"Mayor Frank Murphy of Detroit started the battle by unkind remarks about large corporations outside the city limits which threw unemployed workers on the Detroit taxpayers for support. The head of the Ford private police system retorted neatly that fraud was widespread in the administration of the dole and that of 5,560 persons listed on the welfare rolls as employes of the company, one-third had never worked there. Others had been discharged for cause and still others actually drew dole money while employed by the Ford company. The mayor demanded proof.

"The Ford police head countered by fixing the number of company workers also drawing the dole at three hundred and promising photostatic copies of the pay roll records in substantiation of the charge. Mayor Murphy ordered a police investigation of the thirty-two thousand families drawing benefits and insisted that the city's fund was administered as efficiently as most businesses.

"A statement which is open to challenge. Meanwhile enough has been disclosed in the Detroit situation to class it as another very excellent argument against the introduction of a city, state or federal-aided dole system in the United States."

FIGHTING HIGH GAS TAXES

Though legislatures in ten states succeeded in raising the gasoline tax this year, news dispatches and editorials in the nation's newspapers show that the popularity of the levy is on the wane and that the tax is no longer "painless."

For the first time in the history of the tax, there was active and widespread opposition to increased rates in many states. The rate was raised only after prolonged and bitter battles, and in several states opposition is continuing to show itself through activity for a referendum vote to offset legislative action. The plea of state officials that larger gas receipts are needed, is met by protests from motorists and business men that the time has come for economy and efficiency in government, rather than increased expenditures.

This should be good news for the harassed motorist, who, in addition to a gas tax of two to six cents a gallon, must likewise pay a personal property tax, a registration fee and a driver's license fee for the privilege of operating his car. Perhaps happier days are ahead in which he will not have to face the apparition of still higher taxes.

THE REAL POWER TRUST

In a recent article, Matthew S. Sloan, President of the New York Edison Company, said that there is no such thing as a power trust today; that it is merely a fabrication of politicians seeking an issue. But there is danger that we will have a real power trust—a danger coming from a different direction than most of us suspect. The real and menacing power trust can be created by those who are fighting the imaginary trusts of the present. Government ownership of the electric industry would mean a power trust of the most expensive sort—a gigantic, all-powerful bureaucracy, reaching into every part of the nation.

Those who remember the government "railroad trust" in wartime, will appreciate the justice of this. No monopoly can be so complete as a government monopoly. No capitalist can be so powerful as a government official. No business could cost so much as a business run by a bureaucracy which can call upon the treasury for the people's money with which to pay its expenses.

The cry of "power trust" is, for the most part, nothing more nor less than camouflage to hide the real issues—which is, Shall we have individualism or socialism as the American policy of the future? That is the question of the moment—that is the problem which the American people will be called upon to decide.

THE "PLUS" SERVICES OF INSURANCE

The purchaser of fire insurance gets his full money's worth—and then some.

It is common belief that insurance merely furnishes indemnity of a definite amount for a specified premium. But in recent years the stock fire insurance companies have gone far beyond that. They give the public secondary services that are of incalculable benefit.

Through surveys of houses, buildings and water systems, testing of stoves, furnaces and similar appliances, through unremitting educational work and relentless prosecution of the arsonist, the fire insurance industry has labored hard to keep fire losses down. It has striven for better building construction and more modern building codes—with the result that our homes and persons are far safer and insurance protection cheaper in the average city but there have been the case had this work been left undone. The industry has constantly lowered its rates, during a time when other costs were on the increase.

It should be understood that these "plus" services of fire insurance are gratuitous. They pay for themselves, and more, by making the buildings of the nation more resistive to fire. Every American, whether or not he is the owner of a fire policy, is indebted to the fire insurance industry for helping to protect his property and make his life more safe.

GUNS AND GROCERIES

It has been found, in Washington, D. C., that many thousands of pistols and revolvers are possessed by local residents although only a very few gun enthusiasts are licensed to have them. One newspaper states that firearms are about as easy to buy as groceries.

Here, in a nut-shell, is one of the strongest arguments against legislation arbitrarily restrictive of such personal rights and liberties as owning a gun. Such laws, going against the grain of free people accustomed to having guns for either protection or sport, are unenforceable and help breed a contempt for all law. They make technical law-breakers out of otherwise good citizens.

A feasible gun law is one making it illegal for a person with a criminal record to possess a weapon, and increasing the penalty for crimes committed with the aid of firearms. Such a law discourages the packing of deadly weapons and at the same time protects the constitutional rights of citizens.

THE PEOPLE'S PROBLEM

No other industry has wider distribution of ownership than the railroads.

Renewed railroad prosperity would mean renewed general prosperity. One-fourth to one-third of the reserve funds of life insurance companies and about 15 per cent of deposits in savings banks are invested in railroad securities. There are about two million individual owners of railroad bonds and stocks. Endowed schools, colleges and hospitals are commonly dependent for part of their income on funds invested in railroads.

There are hundreds of thousands of railroad employes, and hundreds of thousands more who are indirectly employed by the railroad through the industry's vast purchases of materials of all kinds.

Are railroad problems "the people's problems?"

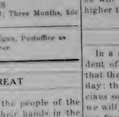
If you are a day laborer, an investor of savings or a bank president—it's a problem you must help solve.

PLANS TO BEAT UNEMPLOYMENT

By ROME C. STEPHENSON

President American Bankers Association

Should loss among unemployment as a social or political problem. For them the remedy is compulsory accumulation of reserve funds on the insurance principle through contributions from the employer, the employee, the state or all three. Work will not meet the present emergency, since there is no reserve to finish jobs now built up and it would take years to do so. At best this plan could only become effective at some indefinite time in the future or sustain the return of another catastrophe of general unemployment. Others look upon unemployment as merely an economic problem, holding that the only fundamental preventive is in business stability.



R. C. STEPHENSON

It may well be asked whether either of these forces—namely, the creation of unemployment insurance funds on the one hand or the maintenance of business stability on the other—do not present to themselves larger problems than the problems they seek to cure. However I am inclined to the belief that the more practical line of approach to the solution of such problems and the prevention of acute unemployment is through unemployment presents in along the latter lines of economic foresight rather than along lines of social legislation.

National Foresight

Business foresight is conceivable not only for the individual but for business as a whole. Instead of individuals and virtually all lines of industry failed to practice it during the latter years of the recent prosperity.

The public welfare of the United States demands that industry as a whole, vigorously and sincerely devote itself to the development of plans of economic foresight, aimed to prevent repetitions of the present unemployment situation. The general outlines for such plans are clearly indicated. They demand that industry adopt a long range viewpoint and by out its operations on a distribution more even, be through that it is far better to have a low point of good employment activity than a short period of frantically over-competitive endeavor which would tend to insure overproduction in various lines, to prevent over-expansion of plant capacity, to avoid overstimulation of public buying and above all to avoid periods of slumps and stagnation following in the wake of booms. All present-day air conditioning engineering, the Holland Institute of Thermodogy of Holland, Mich. Potential relief waits in the basement of nearly every home, ready to spread the comfort of coolness.

For just as modern air conditioning science has made it possible to keep the movie theater "20 degrees cool" while the temperature outdoors is above 90, so it is possible to keep the dwelling house a refuge from outdoors heat during the hot week weeks of summer.

Only, whereas the cooling of public buildings and other big structures requires complicated and expensive machinery, home cooling can be accomplished at a minimum of expense with slight changes in the same equipment that supplies heat in winter.

To understand why this is so, the engineers of the Institute of Thermodogy explain, it is necessary to know something about how evaporation heat gets into the human body and the body gets rid of it.

Human Body Like Furnace.

In the first place, the body is just like a furnace. Eating is just like putting in fuel. The food is only dined in the body flames, producing energy.

But the body is like an engine; to just as the boiler and pistons of a locomotive convert heat energy into mechanical energy to keep the wheels going round, so the body converts heat into energy to fix food into muscular energy for the performance of work.

Most of us, though, don't turn all the heat energy of the food we eat into muscular energy expended in exertion. Much of it remains in the form of heat. Physiology tells us that the internal temperature of the healthy body is 98.6 degrees. When it goes above it gets those that of them. All present-day air conditioning engineering, the Holland Institute of Thermodogy states, is based on these facts of physiology.

Moving Air Brings Coolness.

In fact, one of the basic principles of the science of coolness, as given to the engineers' "Little Book" is that "air motion makes any moderate condition feel cooler" true of the included note also added in the twelve years of research that ascertained these facts put it this way: "Air motion exerts a cooling effect on the human body in atmospheres where the temperature is less than that of the body."

This principle is applied in many industrial plants to improve working conditions. In two English shipyards between which the air was driven at moderate velocity the production of workers was increased by from 10 to 12 per cent higher than in two other shops of quite that were ventilated by ordinary means. The temperature in engine rooms ranges from 100 to 70 degrees by means of air motion.

The principle is also employed in American industries. Forced air blasts are used to cool the heads of the workers.

Heating System Used for Cooling

Why aren't we always turning on the air conditioning system when it is in fever? For, of course, we can sense for more heat than is needed for the work we do and to keep the body at its normal temperature. The reason is that the human body has the remarkable faculty of controlling its own temperature, but is a thermostat automatically controls the temperature of a house, school or office building.

Body Throws Off Heat.

Thermostats are instruments placed on the walls of rooms, each one so installed that, when the temperature falls to a certain point, an electric current is sent to a motor down in the basement. This motor turns a simple mechanism to open the draft door of the furnace. When the temperature of the room upstairs comes back to the required point, the thermostat shuts off the draft. In closely similar manner the Holland Institute of Thermodogy explains, the body controls its own temperature. This is done in two principal ways.

One of these is radiation. The body gives off its excessive heat to objects that are cooler. But during an extremely hot weather, this safety valve is apt to close down. Then comes into play the other principal cooling effects we find up in the air. Moving air cools us as they cool; absorb any of its heat.

Conducted to the surface, but heat leaves the body in other ways. Some heat is conducted to the air next to the skin and passes from one thing to another by direct contact. But as most things are cooler than the body, this method of cooling is confined along a couple of inches. Conducted heat is a small factor in air cooling. Diffusing engineering because ordinarily only a small part of our body surface—but the soles of our feet, when exposed, contribute to the cooling effect.

Heat Carried Off by Air.

But one of the most important safety valves is the third, convection. Convected heat is conveyed by the atmosphere. If the air is cooler than the body, and circulates about it, then it is the air which takes away the heat. If the air is warmer than the body, it will help to warm you. If body temperature and air temperature are the same, there is no heat exchange between them.

The practical conclusions in which these three safety valves don't operate to reduce the excessive heat generated in the body. Those are the extreme summer conditions which we call "stifling" and "weathering." And all the objects surrounding the body are not warmer or cooler than the body and the air is too warm to convey any of its heat away. What can be done to serve as an emergency valve?

As a matter of fact, what does happen? The body sweats. Sweat is evaporated. Now, one of the basic principles of physics is that evaporation causes coolness. So perspiration really is one of the best natural safety valves we have. But it is one of the most inefficient. It is only when the air is dry that it is thoroughly effective. If excessive warmth. Anything that increases the evaporation of perspiration is a great aid to comfort.

Humidity Important Factor

Of course, the relative humidity of the air has much to do with this. When the relative humidity is high, when the weather is "muggy" as we say, the body is not so thoroughly dry but the less it is the humidity, the air circulates as a cooling influence. Aside from other sources that it can't absorb much heat from the skin.

That is the condition when the humidity is high and the air is stagnant. But suppose that the air both stagnant, but is moving past and around the body with a lively velocity. Whenever a particle of moisture is driven from the body, it still no borne away quickly and there air still comes and goes to repeat the process. So the air's movement will give us relief by increasing evaporation.

Air motion, moreover, is the chief thing that aids convection. Of course, when the air is hot and moving rapidly, it can't help but heat the body rather than cool it. But conditions seldom are so severe that this occurs. Usually, air motion, with a temperature even slightly below that of the body, is cooling.

So we see that radiation, convection and evaporation are the body's three great safety valves, that our discomfort is a time, and that air motion is a factor that influences two of them.

Anything that increases the evaporation of perspiration is a great aid to comfort.

Humidity Important Factor

Of course, the relative humidity of the air has much to do with this. When the relative humidity is high, when the weather is "muggy" as we say, the body is not so thoroughly dry but the less it is the humidity, the air circulates as a cooling influence. Aside from other sources that it can't absorb much heat from the skin.

That is the condition when the humidity is high and the air is stagnant. But suppose that the air both stagnant, but is moving past and around the body with a lively velocity. Whenever a particle of moisture is driven from the body, it still no borne away quickly and there air still comes and goes to repeat the process. So the air's movement will give us relief by increasing evaporation.

Air motion, moreover, is the chief thing that aids convection. Of course, when the air is hot and moving rapidly, it can't help but heat the body rather than cool it. But conditions seldom are so severe that this occurs. Usually, air motion, with a temperature even slightly below that of the body, is cooling.

So we see that radiation, convection and evaporation are the body's three great safety valves, that our discomfort is a time, and that air motion is a factor that influences two of them. All present-day air conditioning engineering, the Holland Institute of Thermodogy states, is based on these facts of physiology.

Moving Air Brings Coolness.

In fact, one of the basic principles of the science of coolness, as given to the engineers' "Little Book" is that "air motion makes any moderate condition feel cooler" true of the included note also added in the twelve years of research that ascertained these facts put it this way: "Air motion exerts a cooling effect on the human body in atmospheres where the temperature is less than that of the body."

This principle is applied in many industrial plants to improve working conditions. In two English shipyards between which the air was driven at moderate velocity the production of workers was increased by from 10 to 12 per cent higher than in two other shops of quite that were ventilated by ordinary means. The temperature in engine rooms ranges from 100 to 70 degrees by means of air motion.

The principle is also employed in American industries. Forced air blasts are used to cool the heads of the workers.

Charlevoix has been incorporated three years, and up to date no village tax has been levied. Whatever public improvements have been made or salaries paid, has come from the license fund. Now that every street has a sidewalk, relieving us of the future necessity of building crosswalks to any great extent, what will you do with your money? What do you think, gentlemen, of the question of building a public dock at the foot of Clinton street? Would it not be for the good of our village to have a dock where the large steamers and local passengers and freight without transferring our private dock? We favor the proposition as if a small tax be levied to do it. Another scheme is talked of which we heartily endorse and that is the purchase of the wooded land along the east of Main street for a public park. While we have all our surroundings peachable attractions in many near visitors we should, by every means in our power, endeavor to supply the goods which we advertise. The ground in question forms a natural park, with evergreens, sightly hills, beautiful evergreens, and all overlooking Lake Michigan. Such a park would undoubtedly be worth many times the cost of such a purchase and we say buy it if it can be done honorably and the village to do it.

A GREAT DAY FOR CHICAGO

T. W. Holland, Esq., who returned from Chicago by the City of Traverse, informs us that the canal which has been constructed connecting the Chicago and Illinois rivers, was opened on Saturday last. A barge of very fifty water started southward. As this city of Traverse approached Lake Michigan the water in the river was moving up stream and near the lake the water had become quite clear and over all the canal proves a success, as seems altogether probable. Chicago may now rejoice. Here was the thing to do all filthy rivers. The pure water of Lake Michigan flowing through the city will be an acquisition to be proud of.—Herald.

ENGINEERS FIND ANSWER TO HOME COOLING PROBLEM

Electrified Propeller Keeps Up Lively Circulation of Air Through House.

Engineers know four ways to produce a cooling effect in theaters, hotels, factories and other big buildings and, according to the Holland Institute of Thermodogy of Holland, Mich., the same methods might be used to cool your home. One is by the evaporation of water. Another is by conditioning engineer's four ways of cooling at a building "20 degrees cool" when it's sweltering hot outdoors, are now using a cooling "20 degrees cool" when it's sweltering hot outdoors, are cooling rolls, or by any combine both these.

2. He may evaporate water without adding heat to the air or subtracting heat from it—a comparatively inefficient process which results in some cooling.

3. He may subtract heat from the air but of this all by means of cooling by low the dew point, as in a domestic frying plant.

4. He may energy in the most convenient, simple the effect of the outdoors without air-conditioned in temperature. So, usually, he is content to keep the air moving with electric fans.

But for most of us, in our homes, says the Holland Institute of Thermodogy, the only practical method is by the fan that lifts the first three methods require expensive and cost efficient machinery. So, to cool our homes we have to resort to the fan or air motion. There are three classes of electrified fans for this purpose.

First, there is the ordinary household fan. On a hot night it may be turned on and directed upon the occupants of the house, and the velocity of its air currents will produce a decided cooling effect.

Then there is the slightly kind of "exhaust ventilator," intended to be built into a part of the space of the kitchen stove. Any household will appreciate its efforts in drawing off the heat and odor of the cooking range.

But both the fan and the "exhaust ventilator" are limited in usefulness. They cannot cool more than one room or a few persons at a time. Those limitations do not apply to the third class of home-cooling equipment—the new type of heating system equipped with an electrified propeller which keeps lively currents of air circulating through all the rooms of the house. "There are two kinds of home-heating plants that have this summer-cooling feature, one known as the 'vaporizer' system, and the other as the 'unit-ventilator.' During the winter their function is to move the warmed air from the heat generator through all rooms of the home more rapidly and in greater volume than the ordinary warm air circulating plant will do.

One consequence of this is that it takes less time to warm up the house on cold mornings. Also these systems maintain more uniform temperatures, which are the same inside

Preserve Old Home of William Cullen Bryant

The declaration by the Massachusetts Historical society of the birthplace of William Cullen Bryant at Cummington, Mass., draws attention to the fact that within 25 miles of New York is the home in which Bryant lived and wrote for the greater part of his life. It is Cedarmere, at Roslyn, on the north shore of Long Island, now preserved as a shrine of American poetry. Not only that, but in the cemetery adjoining at North Dutch the remains of the poet rest. Few more lovely spots can be found on Long Island than Cedarmere. Bryant's gardener, Hiram Dodge, who occupies the homestead, was kept the house as it was when occupied by the poet. There is the old terrace, with the worn redstone mantle of Hiram peaches. The monument at Bryant's graveside upon the estate is situated upon the very spot he selected for his interment.

After his return to the Evening Post in 1827 he was connected, at intervals with that, earlier newspaper of the Bryant home, whose grounds slope to meet the meadows where it joins through Bryant's words. But, although much time has passed, nothing has changed at Cedarmere since the days of the passing of the poet.

Gene Tunney said at a dinner in honor of Hugh Walpole, the English letterer and novelist:

"If we were to read the old books—Tolstoi and Tarrius and so on—then we'd judge all those new off-color books more wisely.

"I know a man who reproached his daughter one day for her ignorance of the classics, and the girl's answer was:

"Golly, dad, how can a girl read the books she might to when she's only got time, as it is, to read the ones she oughtn't to."

HUMIDIFIED HOME AIR PROTECTS HEALTH, HOUSE & FURNISHINGS

DAMAGE DONE BY SUPER-DRY AIR

Atmosphere, Humidity-Hungry, Sucks Moisture From Occupants, Household Furnishings.

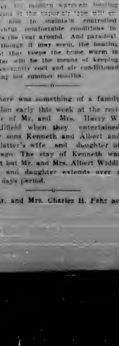
DISEASE and discomfort lie in wait for man and damage to expensive furniture and other household furnishings lurk in preliminary methods of home heating unless the Holland Humidifier, of Thermology of Holland, Mich.

In refrigeration of the future, the frontline points to the excellence of cools and other respiratory infections that torture, epidemic with the advancement of the winter heating season, and to the damage to indoor decks, pianos, and to interior wood, more additional to the furniture in fact of winter indoor air.

As the symptoms of living have changed and efficient heating systems have replaced the old stove burner and fire above the serious effects of moisture deficiency in the home are appreciated more and more evident. The old question of wash days hiding days the freezing-up-bottle and the moving days, which once were the source of much household moisture are no more. An adequate supply of moisture is hardly lacking in the home of today.

The way to lessen this will be termed superiority. This is due to the fact that winter air does not contain enough moisture to suit human requirements. As air is heated, it expands and has greater moisture capacity. To supply this it draws upon every other near moisture such as cellar and the result is drying of household equipment. Humid things in the home during the day are drawn the moisture from the skin, and drive out and irritates the delicate membranes in the nose and throat that under normal conditions resist a host of germs. Health resistance is thrown in broken down and persons easily "take" the "flu" or pneumonia germs that cause influenza, bronchitis, pneumonia, and other ills of the respiratory tract.

The only remedy for this unhealthy condition can be artificial humidification of the home air. To supply an adequate amount of moisture at least a gallon of water per room should be evaporated each day. This is far more than enough for the average home. Many efficient arrangements of Modern warm air systems of the steam or hot water heating systems do the nearly humidifier that evaporates from 10 to 15 gallons of water per day according to requirements. These humidifiers enable the maintenance of a relative humidity of 40 to 50 per cent, an ample supply of moisture in the air to preserve health and to prevent the drying out of costly furnishings and interiorness, thereby saving and assures getting physical comfort at moderate temperatures of 70 or 72 degrees.



VITAMINS AND VAPOR
INVISIBLE HEALTH PROTECTORS

VITAMINS CAN NOT BE SEEN IN FOOD — SUN CAN VAPOR BE SEEN IN AIR

Without a maximum supply of Vitamins human's do not grow and develop properly

Without an adequate amount of moisture in the air, no living thing can grow and thrive properly

VAPOR IN HOME PROTECTS HEALTH

Epidemics of Winter Ailments Laid to Dearth of Moisture Indoors.

JUST IMPORTANT are the vitamins and sunshine in food, but equally as important is the moisture in the air. Without an adequate supply of the various vitamins, foods would be unable to perform their functions properly, and the common ailments which result from lack of vitamins are rickets, eye diseases, stunted growth, indigestion, scurvy, beriberi, and worse. But science has proved that various of the vitamins are essential in disease prevention and in the cure of many diseases.

Equally important to life is another invisible protector—an adequate supply of humidity, vapor evenly in the air. Without air moisture, land-life could not long exist. Even in desert regions, points out the Holland Institute of Thermology of Holland, Mich., the air contains a high percentage of moisture. In fact, says the institute, there is more moisture in desert air than in the air in most American homes during the heating season.

The amount of moisture in home air during winter is ably attested by the drying out of furniture and interior woodwork, by the inability of home owners to keep plants and flowers for any length of time. And continues the institute, it is strictly evidence of the epidemic of colds and other respiratory diseases that afflict the American public every fall and winter.

Because these diseases become epidemic with the approach of cold weather, progress of the heating season, health authorities and air-conditioning experts are of the opinion that the excessively dry air in American homes and places of work is a contributing factor of no mean importance. They point out that lack of moisture causes gastric secretion defects and causes irritation of the delicate membranes of the respiratory organs, giving disease germs full opportunity to cause infection of the throat and lungs.

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

Four years ago, while the Republican party was choosing Herbert Hoover as its candidate for president, Governor Alfred E. Smith of New York was in Houston, Texas, addressing the Democratic state convention.

Governor Smith was in a reminiscent mood. He told the delegates how, when he was a boy, he had been a page in the New York assembly. He told them how he had learned to read by studying the signs on the trucks that rumbled past the capitol. He told them how he had learned to write by practicing on the backs of envelopes.

Then he told them how, when he was a little older, he had been a newsboy, selling papers on the streets of New York. He told them how he had learned to count by counting his change.

Governor Smith's audience was delighted. It was delighted because it knew that Governor Smith was a self-made man, that he had risen from the ranks of the poor, that he had made his own way in the world.

Governor Smith's audience was delighted because it knew that Governor Smith was a typical American.

Typical Americans are not born with silver spoons in their mouths. They are born in humble circumstances, and they rise to fame and fortune by their own efforts.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to read and write. They learn to read and write by studying the signs on trucks and the backs of envelopes.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to count. They learn to count by counting their change.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to do anything. They learn to do things by doing them.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to succeed. They succeed by hard work and perseverance.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to govern. They learn to govern by governing.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to lead. They lead by leading.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to serve. They serve by serving.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to rule. They rule by ruling.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be free. They are free because they have struggled for freedom.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be equal. They are equal because they have struggled for equality.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be democratic. They are democratic because they have struggled for democracy.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be self-reliant. They are self-reliant because they have struggled for self-reliance.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be individualistic. They are individualistic because they have struggled for individualism.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be progressive. They are progressive because they have struggled for progress.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be liberal. They are liberal because they have struggled for liberalism.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be conservative. They are conservative because they have struggled for conservatism.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be radical. They are radical because they have struggled for radicalism.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be reactionary. They are reactionary because they have struggled for reactionism.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be anything. They are anything because they have struggled for anything.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be nothing. They are nothing because they have struggled for nothing.

Typical Americans are not born with the ability to be anything, to be nothing, to be free, to be equal, to be democratic, to be self-reliant, to be individualistic, to be progressive, to be liberal, to be conservative, to be radical, to be reactionary,

CREATING LAWLESSNESS

Human nature—one of whose fundamental characteristics is the urge toward freedom—cannot be changed by legislation.

Age-old customs cannot be erased overnight by a law.

Here are truths that should be called to the attention of every lawmaker. An important reason for the prevalence of crime in America is that we have harassed the good citizen with a tremendous volume of hasty, unenforceable and ill-considered legislation. It will usually be found that law-abiding nations are those where the laws are designed to protect the rights of citizens, rather than to restrict them on the dubious theory that crime will thus be lessened.

We cannot curb lawlessness by merely passing more needlessly restrictive laws to break.

NECESSITY OF COOPERATION STRESSED

In a recent address before the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Arthur H. Hyde, Secretary of Agriculture, stressed the necessity of concerted action of farmers for cooperation in producing and marketing their products.

As he pointed out, industry, finding that the individual business cannot blindly go its own way, has set up organizations for collective thinking. Agriculture, which in volume and value of production is greater than any other business, must do the same.

The dairymen of the nation have made great strides in promoting efficiency. Where, in 1850 we maintained 278 cows per 1,000 persons, in 1927 we needed but 186, in spite of the fact that consumption of dairy products has been increasing at a rapid rate. And the dairy farmer is now making further progress through cooperative organizations which provide him with a powerful selling agency for his milk in addition to aiding him in increasing his efficiency and raising the standard of his products. Only by adjustment of supply and demand—which, in turn, can only come through "cooperatives"—is the farmer able to receive a reasonable profit for what he sells.

The Dairymen's League Cooperative Association is a fine example of the type of organization of which Secretary Hyde has spoken. It has 48,000 members, 238 shipping plants, 24 distributing plants and facilities valued at $10,000,000. In the last ten years it has returned to its members over $10,000,000 MORE than they would have received except for the existence of the League. Here, in a nut shell, is the prime reason for the existence of the cooperative.

LITTLE CHANGE AT MOSCOW

We have seen a great deal of editorial comment recently to the effect that Russia is once more drifting toward capitalistic standards and that the time may not be far off when a complete change of front will be made by the autocratic soviet government at Moscow.

The alleged changes in the communist system recently announced have been summed up as follows:

To change the policy toward specialists of the old order to attract more of them to industry.

To increase the interior sources of industry and develop the piece-work system.

Readjustment of wages to make the scale commensurate with the type of labor performed; to halt the workers from shifting from one place to another to improve their living conditions.

"Even under socialism," Stalin is quoted as saying, "wages must be paid according to the work done and not according to the needs of the workers."

Nothing could be further from the truth than to say that this represents an about face on the part of the communist leaders. We have heard the same assertion time and again, during the past decade, that the reds were making a retreat toward capitalism. On each occasion the assertion has proved untrue and in a few weeks or months we have discovered that the cabal at Moscow had become more thoroughly communistic than ever.

Any statements of a change in the communist system coming out of Moscow are made for purposes of temporary policy only. The clique in charge at Moscow is determined, above all things, to retain its iron grip on Russia, and it cannot do this by permanently encouraging individual effort and individual responsibility.

GERMAN "RETALIATION"

In his interesting letters from Berlin, describing conditions in Germany, Frederick Kuh punctures the theory that American foreign sales have fallen because of the American protective tariff. The decline in American exports, it may be said, has not been greater in proportion than the decline in exports of all other nations, this being partly due to a decreased consuming capacity throughout the world, and partly to a heavy decline in commodity prices.

Mr. Kuh says that Germany is actively engaged in building up her export trade, in her effort to pay reparations and maintain employment for her own people. Whereas two years ago Germany was exporting fifteen million dollars worth of goods to America, and importing but from 30 to 35 million dollars worth of American goods, she is now exporting eleven and a half million dollars worth of goods to America, and importing about the same amount from this country.

In other words Germany, like every other country in a period of unemployment, is trying to buy less and sell more. This is a situation that has not been created nor greatly affected by our tariff. The drop in our exports would clearly have occurred regardless of whether we raised or lowered our tariff. By increasing our tariff we have, however, been able to keep more workers busy in the United States than would otherwise be possible. We are still buying abroad hundreds of millions of dollars worth of commodities as could produce at home, at a time when we have idle men and materials capable of producing them.

WORK FOR PUBLIC SAFETY

Every state should officially inaugurate a "Save-a-life" motor vehicle campaign this year. Several such campaigns have been tried in a number of eastern states with splendid results. Brakes, steering and lights are inspected and corrected and the need for safe and sane driving is brought home to the motorist. It is the common experience that the accident rate declines during the campaign and the period following.

Only organized effort can make progress against the increasing danger of our highways. The incompetent and the reckless have become genuine menaces to the lives and property of citizens. The toll of deaths and injuries mounts day by day, in spite of modernization of traffic laws in many states.

We must, through rigorous examination, make sure that the driver is capable of safely operating a car. Then we must, through "Save-a-life" campaigns, or similar movements, make sure that the car he drives is mechanically safe. Thereafter the problem comes down to individual responsibility and understanding. Education must be unremitting. The motorist, as an individual, must accept the responsibility that is his when he uses the public highways.

Automobiles cost more lives than wars. At a time when all the enlightened nations of the world are seeking for peace, it might likewise be well for them to concentrate on peaceime public safety.

THE WORKER AND INDUSTRY

An organized movement to insure stability of employment for several hundred thousand workers has been launched by the electric light and power industry. This action followed a recent address by Gerard Swope, President of the General Electric Company, favoring cooperation between employers and workers in administering and contributing to old age, accident and job insurance.

Mr. Swope said: "Unless industry finds a way, the government may feel itself compelled by public opinion to endeavor to solve the problem. If it is done by the states, then the costs will be distributed through taxation and there will be an economic restraint either on the collection of the funds or their distribution.

"The question becomes largely the responsibility of management, but even in this case the cooperation of the employe should be enlisted so that his interest may be aroused and he may be fully cognizant of the significance of the solution of this problem."

SILVER IN INDUSTRY

The future of silver, according to Charles White Merrill of the Bureau of Mines, will depend on industry. He points out that silver, except for photography, has found no important industrial use in recent times, and the photographic industry does not take five per cent of available silver supply.

The United States is the leading consumer of silver for arts and industries, using about 42,000,000 ounces a year. Use of silver in other countries is small, and three-fourths of the current supply goes for coinage. If the metal is to be brought back to its former standing, it must find new markets and new uses.

Effort is now being given to studying fields in which silver might profitably be used. The world, generally, has gone to the gold standard of money, and the next logical development is to make silver, like copper and lead, an important industrial metal.

The best way to get rid of the farm surplus is to make fat women fashionable again. The reason father doesn't eat so much wheat and corn products as usual is that mother doesn't prepare 'em any more on account of the calories.

Motor manufacturers are said to be searching for new ways to increase their output. That's easy. Have Congress pass a law making automobile riding illegal.

GETTING BUSINESS GLOOM BEHIND US

By ROME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

THERE is such a thing as overdoing a boom. Overindulgence makes the great majority sick the next day. And the same is true in a boom, and under conditions which, when the New York banker was asked recently when he could tell that a turn for the better had come. About three months after it has happened," he replied, "for stability implies a turning point." Is there any more significance in that remark than appears on the surface. As one of our most optimistic and successful bankers realizes that the turn has already come and that we are now witnessing the time to adopt constructive policies that will enable business to progress along lasting lines, rather than to speed up from one period of depression to another by such panicky expedients as attempts to manipulate the currency and credit. Such remedies are as dangerous as they are futile.

It is a favorable sign of the times that the bankers of the country are more and more realizing that the welfare of the depositor has been safeguarded and all eyes are pointed and looking ahead for the best information that the turn for the better is on its way. Who knows but what the best thing we know we will get tomorrow looking backward instead of forward as we realize that the turn has already come. It is a matter of record and facts must take across the nation of the value of business and many of us are too busy minding the old Point from losing sight of the fact that there is an upward movement. He who knows but what the best information tomorrow will be one we are already taking place.

BANKERS FAVOR GRADUAL CHANGE

National Commission Believes Local Sentiment Should Govern Evolution in Methods of Conducting Banking.

IF substantial changes are to be brought about in branch banking in the United States they should originate with the bankers rather than with the Washington administration, in the opinion of Governor Eugene Meyer, Jr., of the Federal Reserve Board. Governor Meyer, speaking before the American Bankers Association recently, declared that "the initiative in the matter of changes in our banking system should come from the bankers themselves, rather than from the government."

Governor Meyer's statement was made in connection with the report of the Commission on Branch Banking, which was appointed by the Association a year ago to study the question and make recommendations. The commission, headed by Governor Meyer, has been holding hearings in various parts of the country, and has received a large number of written communications from bankers and others.

The commission's report, which was presented to the Association by Governor Meyer, declares that the present banking system of the United States is "fundamentally sound," and that "the dual system of banking, with the right of choice between state and national charters, should be preserved." The report also declares that "the privilege of establishing branches should be granted to national banks in states which grant that privilege to state banks, and should be withheld from national banks in states which withhold that privilege from state banks."

The commission's report, however, recommends that national banks be permitted to establish branches in the city of their location, regardless of the law of the state in which they are located, provided that the establishment of such branches is approved by the Federal Reserve Board. The report also recommends that national banks be permitted to establish branches in foreign countries, and to own the stock of foreign banks.

The commission's report, Governor Meyer said, was not intended to be the last word on the subject, but was merely a progress report. The commission will continue its study of the question, and will make further recommendations to the Association at its next annual convention.

Post and Gatty Will Fly to State Fair

Here are Wiley Post (left) and Harold Gatty, who started around the world in record time, with their famous plane, the Winnie Mae, in which they will fly to the Michigan State Fair and Exposition at Detroit the opening day, Sunday, Sept. 9.

TWO GREAT SKY SPECTACLES AT MICHIGAN FAIR

POST AND GATTY, HEROES OF GLOBE FLIGHT, SIGNED WITH FAMOUS PLANE

Autogiro Race Also Scheduled For The Closing Day's Program At Detroit

Two big air events for which arrangements have been completed have interested interest in the coming Michigan State Fair and Exposition to such a degree that record crowds are will in sight.

Not only is a great turnout from the metropolitan district certain and many other Michigan points assured, but from neighboring states, according to Fair Secretary John L. McNamara.

For the opening day Sunday, Sept. 9, aviation's two old state dignitaries will some of the foremost aeronautical figures in the country will be on hand to greet Wiley Post and Harold Gatty, globe-circling heroes, who will fly their famous plane, Winnie Mae, in to the fair grounds.

An impressive air escort is planned for this occasion with Howard F. Sebbe, himself an aviator of world wide renown, in charge of the formation ceremonies.

Saturday, Sept. 12, will see a thrilling air race between planes with five to 10 pilots of this type taking part. The height of the race will be for the grounds is rapidly being put in shape for these events and exciting interest throughout Federal action, would mean a swamped market for the country as a whole, and the public, pointed out, is beginning to realize that this is no time for panicky selling.

The $25,000 championship fund and track events also scheduled for the opening day under the auspices of the Aeronautical Association, Michigan Amateur Athletic Union and Detroit Department of Recreation, is a signal concert in the grass during the afternoon and at night in the Coliseum the fair features popular orchestras, which has been engaged for the entire week and established entertainment features, attention of the public is focused on the fair.

Engage Symphony For Michigan Fair

The Detroit Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Victor Kolar will be heard in two concerts daily during the week of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 6 to 13.

Miss Merrill Mozett Kyle will be featured as vocal soloist with the orchestra at the opening of the first week when she will be presented as soloists, including Miss Dorothy Lautz, concert master; Peter Hruby, first trumpet; John Wummer, first flute; Joseph Schmeer, first clarinet; Abner Stavitsky, first horn, and Fred A. Hyde, chief percussionist, who will appear as xylophone soloist.

Sunday afternoon, Sept. 6, the opening day of the fair, the orchestra will give a concert especially in the grove at the state fair grounds, to be followed in the evening by patriotic numbers in the Coliseum. For the remainder of the week there will be afternoon concerts in the grove, and nightly appearances in the Coliseum in connection with the boats thrill.

BIGGER DISPLAY OF LIVESTOCK AT STATE FAIR

EARLY STEPS ARE TAKEN TO BUILD UP THIS MAJOR DEPARTMENT

In line with the greatly broadened interest this year of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, which opens Sunday, Sept. 9, and runs for a full week, efforts directed toward a pronounced revival of interest among Michigan farmers in breeding and exhibiting pure-bred livestock of every kind are already achieved.

Outstanding manufacturers and industrial leaders of Detroit have aligned themselves solidly behind the whole fair project, which has been enlarged and improved a hundred per cent, it is claimed, in every department.

Plans for this 92nd anniversary of the state fair to be held Sept. 6 to 13, inclusive, offer as much of interest to every visitor, whether from the city or farming community, as does any county or state fair in the country.

Conferences already held by men heads of the fair board, associations of breeders and members of the school groups assure well not only for their exhibits this fall but important strides in years to come. Matters such as premiums and better facilities for exhibitors will be taken up from time to time, with every viewpoint taken into consideration.

PURSES ATTRACT HARNESS ENTRIES

INTEREST IS KEEN IN EARLY CLOSING EVENTS

Interest in the harness racing program at the enlarged 1931 Michigan State Fair and Exposition, now the middle mile of September during the exhibition, will be just as keen as ever, if the impending list of entries for the early closing events is any criterion, according to Secretary John L. McNamara, in charge of the event.

Entries for the three events, which will be for $2,000 trot for the Manager's Trophy and a purse of $1,000, there will be five days of attractive racing events. In all $9,000 will be paid out to owners, drivers and grooms. To each driver declared the winner of the scheduled races the fair management will pay $20, while an additional $10 will go to the groom of the winner.

The early closing features will bring out the cream of a considerable number of Detroit and Michigan owners, with other states well represented.

Former Gov. Fred W. Green of Michigan's ticket to his entry, Hickman, is made a good showing in the colonial cup event, the three-cornered trot and under, for the Mayor's Trophy and a $600 purse.

LANSING BOY FIRST ENTRY IN BETTER BABY CONTEST

Keith Wallace two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. Hugh Wallace of South Cedar St. Lansing, holds the proud distinction of being the first entry in the state district of the Better Baby Contest at the Michigan State Fair and Exposition.

STATE FAIR TO OFFER TRIBUTE TO WOMANHOOD

STYLE SALON HOME-MAKING EXHIBITS WILL ATTRACT INTEREST

A living tribute to womanhood will be paid by the Michigan State Fair and Exposition in its portrayal of progress Sept. 6 to 12 at Detroit.

In developing the general scheme for a fair this year that will more truthfully reflect the state's great industrial progress there by will county industry into the family of activities, the fair management committee has devoted considerable thought to women's interests.

Advancement in the art of homemaking will be typified by a wealth of exhibits. The up-to-date equipment for lightening the burden of housekeeping, in woman's particular workshops, is to be displayed in a variety of specific attraction to the feminine visitors at the fair and especially.

A living tribute accompanying efficient and economy with the manufacture of a complete home will be the purpose of development. Plans for this outstanding feature call for a novel setting to display the latest modes with a nationally known director in charge.

Every year complaint is made by those who come to Charlevoix for rest, of the noise made by the necessary whistling of the tugs and steamers in the harbor. And only the other day one of the most prominent summer residents called at the Sentinel office and registered another of this year's numerous complaints and said that a new comer at the Belvedere remarked that this was the noisiest resort that he had ever visited. Mr. Watkins has started a crusade against ringing of bells and blowing of whistles. Dr. F. M. The summer visitors realize that a certain amount of whistling is necessary in the navigation of steam vessels, but what they object to is the habit of some captains of blowing half a dozen long blasts in the future hope of steamering up sunfish passenger.

WHICH IS MOST IMPORTANT

Talking about this matter of a new car line from one resort to the other via Bridge street leads us to observe that while it may be very desirable there is another matter that should take precedence over all others in the consideration of public improvements and that is a system of water-works. In considering water supply, health of domestic convenience, green lawns, fire protection and street hose are minor in their importance. The citizens in the improvement of the sanitary condition of our village is what should prompt our corporation authorities to look into the matter at once. At the present sanitary convention held here, the official report, which is now before us, the subject upon which the most stress was laid both by state health officers and local contributors, was the poison secretions in the water of our wells and the unanimous opinion was officially recorded that from that source came the diphtheria germs that have in the past three years caused so much alarm. A public system of waterworks would at once solve this problem of the public health.

With our present system of water supply there will of which we speak will certainly grow no less, and we shudder at the contemplation of what may be in store for us if our neglect of this vital question continued. Spasmodic outbreaks of that terrible scourge for a time inspire only spasmodic interest and with the taking down of the Health officer's placards, we lapse into indifference. Charlevoix is at present free from the plague, and has been for some time, but reason teaches us that we have no reason to expect continued immunity from it.

We regard this question of water supply one that should occupy the attention of our council and people first of all. We can get along with out sidewalks, and we can get around the streets in comparative darkness, but we should not compel visitors to walk in the valley of the shadow of death when a remedy is plainly pointed out to us. The State Board of Health selected Charlevoix as a notable example of the filthiest of disease, and, in order to avoid a repetition of the danger lurking in our midst a sanitary convention was held here. What good has come of it? The same evils exist and we know not how soon we may be called upon to bear their effects.

The collection comprises a full war coat, tunic, with the war eagle bonnet, and other headdresses which are worn by the chiefs and are truly decorative, the head of the brave who has taken a certain number of scalps (he is particular not to take the hair of a woman) is not unlike the headgear of the Indian we saw recently on one of the boats. Quivers containing arrows, bows made of elk-horn, a shield which bears the marks of many a battle with the Sioux, a medicine pipe, an ancient war club, Indian saddles, tobacco pouches, pipes of peace, and many other articles equally novel and curious. They were collected by Capt. Gilbert at great expense and labor, and will be well worth seeing.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE

What An Outsider Thinks of Our Harbor, Etc.

Chicago, Ill., July 2, 1871

Editor Sentinel:—

Dear Sir:—Will you please inform me and others, when Pine River is to be opened so that vessels can enter Round Lake? Quite a number of persons have spoken to me about this, and I am as anxious for the information as anyone. I learn from private sources that there is a probability of the U. S. & I. E. R. touching at Traverse City and Elk Rapids. Now neither one of these points possess the advantages of Pine River, and the latter is in the direct line of local steamboats are called to, while at Pine River there seems to prevail an apathy hard to realize. I have heard Pine River spoken of time and again, by tourists, as one of the most beautiful places between Chicago and Buffalo, and it is a beautiful place. But tourists complain that they do not find the accommodations at Pine River that should be there for the benefit of pleasure seekers. I have heard a number say that they preferred your town to Mackinac as a summer resort, but that the hotel accommodations were insufficient. I know that there will be a rush for your place as soon as the river is opened, so make it known and the passage between Round Lake and Lake Michigan less difficult. I presume you have heard that Chicago proposes to drain Lake Michigan into the Mississippi and to that end has already started the Chicago river to flowing up stream. The water is not much, but there is a marvelous difference in the color. It will take about a year to float off all the filth, and even then it will hardly be as strong as some beautiful little river. Now, Mr. Editor will you please inform your humble reader when the river is to be opened, and why the work has not been completed? Is the waterway another that a large body of land had been set aside for your enterprising town? Can you in any information correct? If so this should be made known in Chicago, and many visitors will be spurred with a jerk.

POULTRY

SEPARATE SEXES IN CHICK FLOCK

Pullets and Cockerels Do Better Apart.

Separate the pullets and cockerels as soon as the sexes can be told apart, says the poultry department of the New York state college of agriculture. Male chicks are likely to be larger, stronger and more vigorous than the females so the pullets have less opportunity to grow when brooded with them.

Chicks of the Mediterranean breeds, such as Leghorns, can be separated earlier and earlier than others, but the separation should also be made with all breeds to insure a more rapid and uniform growth of both pullet and cockerel flocks. It prevents the size of the flocks and gives more feeding and watering space for the birds left.

Keep the cockerels which develop fastest as breeding males, and start with three or four times as many of these at broiler size as will be needed for breeding. Wear the leghorns to marker as soon as they are salable, for prices go down rapidly as the sex and size advance. Slower chicks make the most rapid growth during the first few weeks of their lives, if fed as much and taken longer to put on weight after they have reached a pound in weight. According to the college of agriculture, chicks increase their weight 58 per cent the first week, 65 per cent the second, 59 per cent the third, 44 per cent the fourth, 32 per cent the fifth, 28 per cent the sixth, 20 per cent the seventh, and 16 per cent the eighth week.

Feeding Chickens Wet Mash During Summer

It has become a regular practice on many poultry farms to feed a wet mash in the old bins during the summer and early fall months, according to the New York State College of Agriculture.

The regular dry mash is moistened with skimmilk or water. From four to six pints of the wet mash are fed to each 100 hens, or as much as they will eat in fifteen or twenty minutes. The wet mash is usually fed late in the afternoon. Dry mash, of course, is constantly kept before the birds.

On the college farm very little, if any, scratch grain is fed in the morning. The hens are given all the grain they will eat after the night feeding of wet mash. Usually this amounts to eight or nine pounds for each 100 birds.

Hens that fail to respond to good feeding and management during the summer should be sold promptly, they advise. Hens of all ages should be carefully culled until September 1.

Poor Egg Layers Molt Early During Summer

At least once during the summer or early fall the poultry flock should be culled to get rid of the birds that are not paying for their keep. Health and vigor are of the first importance in culling poultry. Hens in good laying condition have bright red combs and wattles. Head lemon hen combs that are waxy in texture. In yellow-skinned breeds the beak and shanks of the heavy layers are ordinarily quite yellow or white. The pelvic bones of a good layer are thin and flexible and when the hen is in laying condition they are wide apart. The skin of a good layer is soft, pliable, and of good texture and the back is wide and long.

Poultry Hints

There is no known way to control blood spots in eggs.

Hurling a period of low prices is the logical time for a systematic and thorough culling of the farm poultry flock.

Culling not only improves the breeding quality of the flock, but if done early enough will save feeding costs.

Ducks must have clean water in pans deep enough to cover the holes in the nose as they drink. Notice how the water and food when drinking which otherwise might clog their nostrils and choke them.

A few years ago very little was known about the mineral requirement of poultry.

Early molting hens are usually poorer producers than late molters are the better producers.

Probably the easiest way to check up on the weight of the pullets is to color band a few birds in each pen and watch these occasionally.

One day is coming when the most successful poultryman, even on general farms, will raise their chickens inside of fences like they raise their hogs and cattle.

Per one who wishes to raise and feed ducks for market purposes, the possibilities in late hatched ducklings should not be overlooked.

An inactive, lazy cockerel or cock is not a safe bird to use at the head of a pen from which you expect to gather the eggs for hatching.

Ducks and geese are usually picked much the same as chickens. It takes some experience to dry pick them in a reasonable length of time.

Hens usually acquire the habit of eating eggs because of some long lack straw. The egg is cracked when it is laid and thus the hens acquire the taste for it.

Oil Well Accident Started Post on Way to Renown as an Aviator

New York—A man who "didn't give a hang" about anything but aviation and another whose earliest life had been lived amidst roaring oilfields engross large black ink world renown because of an oil well accident.

Wiley Post and Harold Gatty—born in different parts of the world and to different modes of living—were friends before through the fact that both lived and suffered through the crash of airplanes in the last few years.

Wiley Post lost an eye in an oil field accident in Oklahoma. That gave him $21,000 compensation, and his first airplane—the start of his flying career that brought this famous flight.

Harold Gatty trained in the Australian naval academy as a navigator, charted courses on the South seas as a youth in his teens, became interested in aviation and after one unsuccessful testhemoglobin attempt joined Post in this around-the-world "adventure."

Post was born at Grand Plain, Texas. In his youth he moved with his family to Maysville, Okla., a small town outside of Oklahoma City, where he went to school and worked on a farm. He dislocated his father when he was 15 years old and began to work in the oil fields. When 18 he married. He worked as a roughneck, driller, tool dresser, tool pusher and contractor in Oklahoma, Texas and Kansas oil fields.

Then one day he saw a flying circus and a ride in a plane cost him $10. He had to work for it. He did. He worked as a parachute jumper, wing walker, stunt flier and finally bought a "Jenny" and started barnstorming with Earle Ellyn and Jimmy Ashen.

For three years he was a "flying vagabond" and his adventures and experiences were many—just as they were with other barnstormers of that period, including such famous flyers as Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

Nobody was Post more self-reliant than he was before an acute ear disorder developed.

P. L. Hall's father was also an Oklahoman, likes to tell of Wiley's early days there.

"One day he came into my office with a sensitive eye in his head and said he wanted to buy some oil leases," he remarked. "He said he'd go ahead himself and get the money if he didn't have it. I told him to see some men I knew in Tulsa.

"When did you first discover Wiley Post as a flyer?" he was asked.

"When he started flying from the Winslow Mine. It was owned then by Wiley Post and three associates and was producing about 1,000 barrels of oil a day. Wiley Post was a driller with an interest in that well as another owner of the field on lease."

Post's second flight was his last. His second wife—Mary Lane of Weatherford, Texas, whom he married in 1930—was in no way to be a flying widow. She had her own established reporting license. And so the start was made in a secret, for a navigator, with Post going down to Oklahoma one day with Harold Gatty at Newspaper friend's home.

Hall didn't know who Gatty was, but asked:

"If Wiley wants him all right."

The navigator was born at Camperdown, Tasmania, Australia, in 1903.

As thirteen he entered the Jervis Bay naval school, the most important naval school which corresponds to the United States Naval Academy.

For four years Gatty attended naval college. He became the youngest officer in the Royal Navy. He served many years as a merchant marine navigator, then went aboard a private yacht as a navigator.

National Park Has Real "Blowgun"

Chicago—When Uncle Sam opens up his new national park in the Great Smoky mountains of North Carolina and Tennessee he is going to have within this magnificent playground even a hunting weapon, an "air gun," that cannot be equaled in any other national park in the country save the Izaak Walton league in a recent conservation bulletin.

This peculiar gun is none other than the blowgun, that primitive slim tool, hollow like the weapon through which the Cherokee Indians blow his deft arrows "feathered" with thistle down.

Some of these quaint old weapons which are nine feet long and which have contributed among the savage tribes of South America and the South seas, still can be found in the possession of the Cherokee Indian nation living in western North Carolina. The reservation of this tribe is in the heart of the picturesque Smokies where the Cherokees live in rough-hewn cabins till the valleys and mountain slopes and hunt.

Climbers, fishermen, automobile tourists and all other folk who go West to see one of these curious old-style guns which depend on long breath and a good "blow" instead of on gunpowder for its force, are do so by driving from Bryson City, N. C., to the Indian town of Cherokee in the heart of the reservation. Some of the full blooded Indians champion blowgunners of former days, usually can be induced to demonstrate the shooting power of the blowgun which originally was used to kill small game.

Barred From Gobi

Roy Chapman Andrews, celebrated American scientist, who was barred from entering his proposed expedition into the Gobi desert by the Chinese authorities. Explaining their action, the Chinese officials referred to Andrews' "arrogant attitude" and said he had been "attaching undue importance" to scientific material from Chinese territory under cover of a passport for hunting."

Revolting Youth

By THOMAS ARKLE CLARK
Dean of Men, University of Illinois.

I suppose most of us would like to do as we please, if that were possible. Indeed, we should recommend it to others. Society's history for some centuries is one of persistent and more and more successful efforts to enable people to do as they please. It wants to choose for itself, and though it has always denied this privilege, perhaps now more than at any other time for centuries it is trying to limit the number and variety of laws and regulations, escaping to England at the experience of age, which says how necessary regulations are if we are to have respect for the substance of the greatest freedom. In no place is this result from regulated more evident than in our schools and colleges where the adolescent circles under new rules which tends to inhibit his free and uncommanded action.

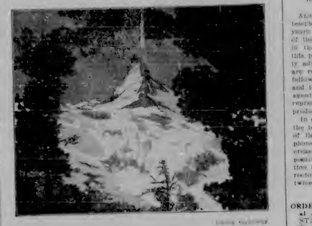
THE SENTINEL FOR PRINTING!

How They Say "Number, Please?"



IN SWITZERLAND

When the American tourist in Switzerland rolls up the folks back home to tell them of the thrill of his first glimpse of the Matterhorn, note which picturesquely outlined by Alpine pines, he doesn't hear the operator greet him with "Number, please?" But, depending upon the part of Switzerland from which he makes the call, he has his choice of hearing the exact equivalent of this expression repeated in any one of three different languages. Switzerland is a confederation of more than a score of political subdivisions, or cantons, many of which differ from each other in historical background, population and language. If a telephone call is made in a German-speaking canton, the operator answers "Nummer, bitte." The French-speaking operators say "Quel numero, s'il vous plait?" The Italian for "Number, please?" is "Che numero, prego?" The Swiss telephone service was extended to Switzerland in July, 1922. About 250,000 Swiss telephones are now within reach of its automatic lines of the Bell System. The service is used extensively for business purposes, as it is by tourists, for Switzerland is one of the most popular international countries of Europe and much of its trade is with the United States.

DIRECTORY IS A LARGE FACTOR IN TELEPHONE WORK

Bell System Publishes Complete List of All Its Millions of Customers

Unlike other industries, it is necessary for the telephone company to compile and distribute for public use a complete list of its customers. The publication and distribution of telephone directories is one of the important phases of providing adequate telephone service.

Rapid Growth in Five Years

The problem of directory service increases is completely and distinctly each year. In 1926 the total number of copies of telephone directories published by the Bell System was about 21,000,000, with headings totaling about 14,000,000 separate names. Five years later, in 1931, these figures had grown to 30,000,000 copies and 19,500,000 listings.

Not only have telephone directories grown so rapidly in size in recent years that in some of the larger cities they are now issued in more than one volume, but they are also being improved in appearance constantly. This has been done in various ways by the systematic use of advertising matter, and by changes in format arrangement, typography and quality of paper.

Improvements Have Been Incorporated

Another important innovation in telephone directories in recent years has been the separation of the "Where to Buy It" section in the classified sections. Under this plan, trade marks of nationally advertised products or services are represented in the directories, followed by the names, addresses and telephone numbers of dealers, agents, service stations or other representatives from which the product or service may be secured.

In spite of the growth in size of the total issue, and in the number of listings, the accuracy of telephone directories has been increased, and it has also been found possible to speed up their production and delivery. Bell System directories are now regularly published twice a year.

Moving Air Best, Blood Tests Show

"Blood pressure is one of the most important changes of the effects of air conditions on the body," says a bulletin on "Air Motion in Home Ventilation" published by the Bell System and also issued to the United Institute of Technology of Stockholm, Sweden.

Referring to blood pressure tests made at the research laboratory of the U. S. Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh, the bulletin shows that, with air motion at a rate of about 6 miles per hour, the effects of heat are not much, if any greater than when the air is still; other similar tests show that air motion has a beneficial effect upon comfort and internal body temperature, as well as blood pressure.

After drawing how air motion promotes warmer time comfort, the bulletin describes several methods by which it can be used for its cooling effect in the home. Among these are the "slap ventilation" and "superventilating" heating systems in which electrified air propellers are installed in the heating ducts moving through the rooms of the house.

Finally, the new methods which may be installed be copied in the United Institute of Technology of Helsinki, Math, shows how these propellers in the rooms drawing coldness and lower cool rooms during cold weather.

Cucumber Long Delicacy

Dr Candolle says that cucumbers were actually from the East Indies but other botanists ascribe them to Asia and Egypt. Literature proves them to be more than 3,000 years old in Asia, and it is known that they were brought into China 140-86 B. C. They were known to the Greeks and Romans and were mentioned by Pliny, who says that they were grown in Africa, and that they were such a favorite with Emperor Tiberius that he had them daily on his table. Charlemagne ordered them planted on his estate in the Ninth century, and they were grown by Columbus in Haiti in 1494. Capt. John Smith mentions them as being cultivated in Virginia in 1584.

Dr. H. G. Mattson of Manistee, former pastor of the local Congregational society of this city, spent some time here this week, partly on business, but primarily to visit some of his many Charlevoix friends.

FINE FARM NOW UP FOR SALE

ORCHARD HILL FARM IN ANTRIM CO. AVAILABLE

One of the largest, most productive diversified fruit farms in Northern Michigan, known as Orchard Hill Farm, located in Forest Home township, Antrim county, Michigan, and operated for the past thirty years by F. H. Hemstreet and Son, will Mr. F. H. Hemstreet is a practical agriculturist and fruit grower as manager for just been placed on the market and for the first time since the first ownership of the property is offered for sale.

The farm property consists of three hundred acres of productive tillable land located on a high plateau about two miles northwest of Bellaire, the county seat of Antrim County. Eighty acres is set out to orchard, diversified fruits, now coming full bearing and productive. The orchard land is four grade of an even and front proof as any orchard land in this region, due to exceptional, perfect drainage. This orchard is a splendid average acreage set up as well as for a fine quality of fruit.

From the orchard you obtain a fine perspective of the surrounding territory. Look in any direction you get a fine view of Lakes by which the property is surrounded, while in the distance, a few miles away Grand Traverse Bay can be plainly seen. Torch Lake, the intermediate chain and Lake Bellaire can be seen by visitors, all of which have a beautiful effect by eliminating the danger of frost in early spring, and makes for moderate temperatures during the fall and early winter months.

That means the fifty acres of apple orchard according to present estimates, are expected to produce 12,000 bushels of marketable fruit in the following varieties, according to the order named; Sweet Bough, Red Astrakan, Jersey Pennin, Wealthy, Snow, Wagner, Grimes Golden, Jonathan and Northern Spy.

Fourteen hundred peach trees are in bearing and well laden with fruit this year. Plums and pears from the northern permanent commercial peach orchard in Michigan. Due to quality facing this section every year for final administration account, and her petition praying for the allowance thereof and for the assignment and distribution of the residue of said estate.

It is ordered that the 4th day of September, A. D. 1931, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said Probate office be and is hereby appointed for examining and allowing said account and hearing said petition.

It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Sentinel, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.

ART SPECIALISTS ENDOW CHEVALIER ROMANTIC DRAMA
Lubitsch Again Guides Popular Star; Straus Songs a Feature

A tremendous combination of acting talent, directorial genius, witty wisdom and music-making magic have been woven into a thrilling and joyous motion picture entertainment, "The Smiling Lieutenant."

Bringing Maurice Chevalier back to the screen after his European fame in another silk-lining romance which combines all the attractive features of his former screen successes, "The Smiling Lieutenant" comes to the Palace theatre next Sunday and Monday.

Two gorgeous leading ladies, the brunette Claudette Colbert, the blonde Miriam Hopkins, keep things lively for the smiling Frenchman, whose voice, recently given to thrilling radio audiences, will have full opportunity to express his personality in song in "The Smiling Lieutenant." Charles Ruggles, the popular laugh-provoker of a score of film hits, gives of his laugh-making talents in this delightful story.

The story deals with a sprightly lieutenant of the guards, madly in love with a young cabaret singer, namely, for whom he is willing to sacrifice the joys of bachelorhood. But first he can accomplish his purpose, however, he is snatched up by a princess who mistakes his smile for a proposal, and forces him into unwilling matrimony. After marriage he forsakes his fiery wife for happiness with the girl of his choice. But his wife, determined to win his regard, learns the secrets of charm from his sweetheart and tears his heart between love with duty or without.

SUPERINTENDENT OF POOR MAKES TRIP TO MACKINAW

Superintendent of the poor, Mr. L. E. Bunton made a trip to Mackinaw City a few days ago taking with him Elton May Hood, who for some time past has been at the county infirmary.

The charge is made that the woman, seventy-two years of age, entered the United States fraudulently, while the trip to Mackinaw city was for the purpose of turning her over to government officials, who will see that she is returned to Canada, through legal channels. Previous to the present case, several others recently according to Mr. Bunton, some months ago, Sarah Sic, Mazey, with a man by the name of Wm. YOUTH DROWNS IN LITTLE TR. BAY

Eugene Gould of Chicago, about twenty years old met death by drowning Wednesday afternoon, August 5th, while swimming in Little Traverse Bay near Menominee Beach.

Although his body was recovered three minutes after he went down in twenty feet of water, all efforts at resuscitation proved of no avail.

Rev. J. E. Lockyer and Ilsen Norquist, local Boy Scout leaders with nineteen members of Charlevoix Boy Scouts arrived at the beach just as the body was taken from the water and were witnesses of the proceedings carried out by Boy Scouts, a member of the Ludington Coast Guard crew and Dr. Engle of Petoskey, in their effort to restore life at the close of the tragedy, the first of the kind in Little Traverse Bay this season.

Young Gould recently spent several days in Charlevoix and when here was a guest of George A. Schwab, Jr.

A Boy Scouts Jamboree was scheduled for Menominee Beach for Wednesday afternoon, and Charlevoix scoutmasters and scouts made the trip to attend the regional event and when stated arrived at the scene as the last of the tragedy was enacted.

LATTER DAY SAINTS HOLD THEIR REUNION

Members of the Latter Day Saints organization in this region have arranged to hold a ten day reunion at Park of the Pines, located on the north shore of Lake Charlevoix some five miles from Boyne City, opening on Friday, August 14th.

Good speakers have been provided who will make a series of interesting addresses.

The meetings are open to the public and a cordial invitation is extended to everyone to attend any or all of the meetings on the ten day program.

Judge Parm C. Gilbert is presiding at a regular term of circuit court this week at the court house. There is some evidence that an adjournment will be taken Friday and while the calendar has not been cleared many cases will be finished, insofar as the local court is concerned, prior to final adjournment.

CAREY FAMILY HOLDS REUNION

Seven years ago, the family picture showed nine grand children and fifteen adults—on Sunday, August 9th all were at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carey, except two and the complete picture if it had been taken would have shown fifteen adults and seventeen grandchildren.

Those present included Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Carey and Betty of Detroit, Simon H. Carey, Mr. and Mrs. Lafayette Carey, Bobby, Elice Ann, Bob Allison and Jimmie of Washington, D. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Pappan, Charles, Billy and Helen, of Deatborn; Mrs. Ned Burnette, Emmaline and Marion Jane, of Toledo; Mr. and Mrs. Lee Carey, Marjorie Jean, Charles, Keith, Tom, Donald, and twins Billy and Bobby of Charlevoix; Miss Erma Carey and Mr. and Mrs. Will Weber, who no doubt will be in the next family picture.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Carey will celebrate their fiftieth anniversary in December 1932.

The Carey family started on their way home Monday and Miss Ned Burnette and children returned to Flint with Mr. Weber. The other members are staying a few days longer.

AUGUST W. C. T. U. MEET TO BE HELD IN CITY PARK

The August W. C. T. U. meeting will be held Friday afternoon in the City Park at the east end of Mason street. INJURED ON YACHT

Charles "chuck" morris, for some time past a member of the Bonnair crew, is at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Morris, where he will convalesce for an indefinite period due to an injury in one of his arms, which he received on board the ship some days ago. As soon as examination warrant he will return to his former duties on the ship.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank D. Hoosteen of Bellaire were business visitors in Charlevoix Monday.

AMBITION REWARDS LOIS MORAN WITH STARRING ROLES

Will Be Seen in "Transatlantic" at Palace Tuesday, Wednesday

Ask twenty different motion picture stars to what they credit their success and you will get twenty different answers. And one of those answers will be "Ambition". It is the answer Lois Moran, who plays the leading role opposite Edmund Lowe in the Fox romantic drama, "Transatlantic" which opens its local engagement next Tuesday and Wednesday at the Palace Theatre.

The ambition in the case that 22-year-old Lois has often called it the incentive without which the years of life seem unmet to an always stop.

After completing his education in Pittsburgh, Pa., her home town, Miss Moran went to Paris with her mother, where she realized her first ambition to be a dancer.

But no sooner had one achieved success in the ballet of "Opera than the call of ambition again stimulated her into those from the direction of Hollywood. Returning to this country it was only long before she was given the leading part in "Stella Dallas" and after that in "The Manic Marion" "Behind That Curtain" and "The Dancers."

Still Miss Moran was not satisfied. There were other fields to conquer, among them the direction of Hollywood. Despite a history of success from the silent picture, both the first train for New York where she was accustomed one of the season's brightest stars in the Broadway production of "Paris."

Meanwhile she has been employing some evidence with great enthusiasm and accounting to her statements a remarkable sense of going calmness. However, she does not intend to accept the success for grand opera, as she has not the ambition.

"But I may try, if it can fortune," she says. "In opinion can set aside ambition."

Miss Moran is but one of three prominent screen actresses who enjoyed luncheon in Transatlantic" The other two are the Nordic Greta Nissen, last seen in "Women of All Nations" and that exotic beauty Olive Borden, the screen's best girl. Myrna Loy, famous Chinese role, and Helen Jerome Eddy.

William Howard directed the productions.

STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER OF CONSERVATION DEPT. MAKES LOCAL VISIT

Mr. Walter E. Hastings, staff photographer with the state department of conservation, Mr. A. E. Frost and son, Paul and Robert, all from Detroit were Charlevoix visitors Monday.

Mr. Hastings is not here in Charlevoix and well, we were going to say by reputation at least by a large number of local residents who have had an opportunity to see his pictures of the wild life, animals and birds taken by him on some of his many excursions in the interest of the department.

All members of the party favored us with a visit at the home of Mr. Frost on the Boulevard, where a supper of bacon in the Dutch oven, fried potatoes as most pleasantly served, as the Detroit publisher was your correspondent.

Capt. and Mrs. R. J. Gillick accompanied by Mrs. C. E. Morrison, all of Grand Haven, are spending their vacation by taking a motoring trip through this region. At present and for a few days they are visiting Charlevoix friends at whose theirs they are sure to welcome and entertain them.

Charles W. J. Bussey left for Mackinaw Island today to take charge of the yacht Sunbeam owned by Mr. George S. Kennard of Grand Rapids. Captain Bussey expects to enter this part sometime today or tonight in charge of the little ship.

Mr. Wm. S. Hodge, who for some little time was owner of the Church of Christ in Charlevoix, has a host of friends in Charlevoix who will be interested to learn that he has accepted a pastorate in Northern Michigan.

Mr. R. S. Wilbur and Miss Helen Rose Clise have gone to Cadillac and Mrs. O. E. Wilbur and Mrs. Wilbur F. Clise at the Wilbur home over the week end. They came on the S. S. Manitou Saturday and returned to Chicago Monday.

VARIETY OF ENTERTAINMENT GIVES SATISFACTION

Sunday was something of a sports day with not only the regular bathing, boating, golfing and tennis program, but special baseball game and good boat program on the schedule.

In the ball game between Charlevoix and Gaylord the former team got into lead from the opening, increased their lead as the game progressed and won easily, without special effort and lead their opponents by safeage margin at the finish of the contest.

The speed boat races over a course on Lake Charlevoix were witnessed by a fair crowd of interested spectators. Three were class affairs, 100 h. p., 150 h. p., and 225 h. p. events, with several entries in each class.

R. Weipert of Detroit taking first place in the 100 horsepower event.

H. B. Vaughan of Detroit, first in the 150 horsepower event.

Charles Fox of St. Louis, Mo., first place in the 225 horsepower event.

The day was exceptional for carrying out a sport program on either land or water.

That many people enjoyed the day was evidenced by the number of cars, many from distant points, passing through the city, while those who motored outside report that all roads highways carried automobiles by the hundreds from all points of the compass.

AMERICA'S MOST PRECIOUS GIFT

George B. Lockwood in the following article concerning the present condition of these United States gives most of us something to think about:

Emil Ludwig, Germany's chief literary figure, says that what has most impressed him in the American people is their spirit of optimism and self confidence, as contrasted with the pessimism and fear prevalent in Europe. He declares that America has the spirit of youth, Europe of old age, and that this fact underlies much that is characteristic of both civilizations.

This statement is true and of great importance. The despair which has seized upon Europe since the World War accounts for the readiness of millions who have lost confidence in themselves, and hope for the future, to surrender the control of their destinies to dictatorships, or centralized governments drifting toward despotism.

America is a monument to the courage and confidence of her people. It took adventurous spirits to leave behind the associations of the Old World in the 17th and 18th centuries, make the perilous passage of the sea, and seek homes in the virgin wilderness. It took courage for the pioneers of all that era to fight their way toward the interior against the warlike savages and the savage wilderness.

Such conflict bred in men and women a self-confidence that finally sought and achieved national independence. It was no longer tolerable that America should be in leading-strings to European kings.

European commentarians in the earlier years of the republic found a stock subject for ridicule in what they regarded as the boastfulness and self-sufficiency of Americans, who, amid their crude surroundings, believed in the superiority of their institutions and the future greatness of America. Their villages they believed would be cities: the wilderness, they believed, would in time be teeming with people. Their hopes have been realized: their dreams have come true.

For Americans to lose their spirit of optimism would be to lose that which is a possession of greater value than all they have inherited, of material possessions, from the past. For courage and confidence can create anew. Cowards and weaklings cannot even defend that which they inherit.

Preachers of pessimism have been busy in this country in recent years. We have an extensive literature of cynicism, of deprecation, of despair. The Sinclair Lewises, the Menckens, the Dreisers, have filled the air with their supersophisticated, sneering, vilifying assaults upon everything American. They have sought to break down the faith of Americans in themselves, in their country, in their civilization, and with the superficial they have achieved a degree of success.

It would be difficult to over-estimate the part played in the creation of the present depression in the United States by the preachers of pessimism. It is generally agreed that fear, lack of faith, lack of hope and confidence, are chiefly responsible for the present halt in American prosperity, and if the belief were to arise tomorrow that the future is bright, it would immediately become bright.

Cynicism is the vice of both immaturity and senility. Those who become subject to such a mood have already failed. The resolution to do it half of the deed. Those who are constantly preaching lack of faith in America, in her institutions, her ideals and her future, are doing all they can to break down that quality of the American mind which has been responsible for most of American achievement. And since many of those preachers of despair are known to be radical social revolutionaries, there is method in much of this madness.

Americans should preserve that psychology of youth which has made America great. They should close their ears to the caterwaulings of the moral weaklings who choose to ignore all values of our civilization, dwell solely upon the abuses and misuses of the existing order, and thus do what they can to make a failure of America by giving to Americans the psychology of failure.

SHARE IT WITH THE FARMER

Declining milk prices have become an increasingly serious problem to American dairy farmers.

The price declines, of themselves, do not necessarily menace the farmers' economic standards. The fact lies in the fact that farmers have been forced to take all of the loss. When milk sold at 16 cents a quart, the distributor received 6.5 cents. With milk selling at 13 cents or less, the dealer still has his 6.5 cent margin, the farmer absorbing the loss.

The farmer cannot continue to bear the price cuts alone. Reductions in milk prices are a natural part of the drop in commodity prices of all kinds—but now the dealer must help bear the burden. He must follow the example of the farmer, who has raised his efficiency and reduced his operating costs to adjust himself to changed conditions.

Out of the 6.5-cent dealer margin, about one-half cent is profit, and about three cents goes for driver and wagon expense. It is not probable that these items can be appreciably reduced. The cut must come out of the other three cents which goes to overhead. Dealers and farmers must work together in living through the present period of low price levels. Each is necessary to the dairy industry and their difficulties must be shared in common.

ACCIDENT PREVENTION ON THE ROAD

Bad manners on the part of drivers are help by many authorities to be the principal cause of automobile accidents.

According to traffic engineers and statisticians, the accident rate would drop to a minimum if drivers would display a little courtesy in operating their cars by giving way when other machines are passing, and would discontinue crowding cars coming in opposite directions, the unnecessary use of loud horns, driving slowly in the midst of fast-moving traffic, etc.

A survey conducted by the Albert Russell Erskine Bureau for Street Traffic Research has shown that the automobile itself is least responsible for accidents. Poor brakes, steering and similar factors cause only a small percentage of mishaps. Human nature has not yet adjusted itself to take advantage of the full efficiency and safety of the modern car. Nine out of ten cars involved in accidents are in perfect condition. Thus, in 90 per cent of cases, accidents result from human carelessness, incompetence or bad judgment.

Good driving manners can cover a multitude of other failings. The driver who resents passing cars, who attempts to hold an undue share of the road, who has no respect for the rights of the pedestrian or other motorists, is a potential killer and destroyer of property. It is against him that future highway safety campaigns must be conducted if they are to show results.

THE REAL PROBLEM

Revolver legislation is too often left in the hands of extremists. The real problem which sound legislation must solve, is how to curb or prevent criminal use of firearms without denying their ownership to law-abiding citizens.

The nearest approach to perfection in this sort of legislation is found in the Model Firearms Bill which has been given the approval of the American Bar Association. But this bill, by increasing penalties for persons who commit crimes with the aid of guns, and providing a penalty for anyone with a criminal record being found with a small arm, does tend to act as a deterrent to gun toting.

The rights of citizens are protected for, under the provisions of the bill, any person with a good record can obtain a gun, the number of which is registered. The gun is not delivered until a time after the purchase, so as to give law-enforcement authorities opportunity to make sure the purchaser is buying it for a legal purpose.

THE C. M. T. C.—A FINE INSTITUTION

It was most fitting for former President Coolidge to call attention, in one of his recent articles to the Citizens' Military Training Camps. At the present time about 37,500 boys are scattered throughout the country attending these centers of health and instruction. Young men of college age are attending Reserve Officers' Training Camps and men who actually hold reserve commissions are being ordered to periods of active duty.

The United States, as Mr. Coolidge indicated, puts its reliance on the citizen soldiers. This is its settled policy regardless of the probability that dependence on a professional army would make for more efficiency. It is therefore plain that the citizen must receive some training in the use of arms. Such training is not only a matter of public duty; it is also one of self-interest to the citizen concerned. If war comes he knows something about soldiering he stands a far better chance not only of being a more effective combatant but also of saving his own skin. To pretend, as some unthinking persons do, that such training increases the risk of war is to show little faith in the American character. Surely the mere knowledge of how to shoot a rifle does not turn a normal boy into a bloodthirsty desperado.

Moreover, those who would deprive the United States of its mite of protection can take comfort in the fact that only 37,500 boys can be taken into camp this year. Out of a population of 125,000,000 this is not a large number. Last year the reserve officers who were ordered to active duty numbered only 1,075 daily officetives. It is not surprising that the number of boys who wanted to go to camp this summer is about double the number of those for whom places could be found. If the law were liberalized the number of applicants probably would be still larger.

For, leaving the grim possibilities of war to one side, the training which these boys receive makes them better citizens in time of peace. Their physiques are improved, their mental alertness is developed and their knowledge of their country is enlarged. When they leave these camps they are, in a sense, an elite. As Mr. Coolidge said, these camps in the beginning were not any too favorably considered by the Government. "Now they have become an institution" which stands as a symbol of the American's ability to realize his individual responsibility and fit himself to discharge it.—New York Herald Tribune.

GOOD TIMES KNOCKING AT THE DOOR

There has been so much bunk written and spoken about the present situation in the business world that it is refreshing to find one or two sane observers with their feet firmly on the ground of facts and common sense. Such an observer is William G. Shepherd, business expert, who has just completed a cautious and considered survey of the economic world. His principal finding is that good times are knocking at the door, and that the main impetus for another era of prosperity will come from the United States.

"We always get some new and good ideas out of hard times," says Mr. Shepherd. "Such ideas were our postal savings banks, our improved banking regulations, our Federal Reserve System, the idea that workers are consumers, and, as such, must not be crippled by wage reductions. We are now coming to the end of blind production, in the race of individual nations to corner the world's business for themselves. Maverick nations are out, and there will be something sane in the world next year or next month, supply the Pure Food Law. Everything about the present situation, and management will mature judgment.

The Sioux crushes may be said to be done. The one hitherto unyielding spirit that has kept up an unceasing warfare for 19 years, is broken at last. Deserted by his warriors, even the elements seemed to war against him. Two years ago his people had over 2,000 head of ponies by disease. Now they claim, to a minute insect, Pustules would appear, the hair would fall out, and the skin and animal exposed to the intense cold of our rigorous winters would freeze.

Stating Bull does not strike one at first sight as an intellectual man but a little study reveals deep character in every line of his face. He is 50 years old, has a prominent nose, and the face of a scout. One of his feet is slightly deformed but he does not walk lame.

He is very proud of his family, and so far as his wives (he has two) and children are concerned, he is very generous. Some calico and blankets were sent out to him, he kept some for himself, but gave it to the needy ones of his camp. He is camped at Fort Buford under the care of Capt. Clifford, Seventh Infantry, and appears to be satisfied. The only complaint that he has made is that too many people come to look at him. He is compelled to remain in his lodge, and the curious ones attempt to fool him even there. This, however, has been stopped. As an evidence of his implacability and determination not to submit is shown by the fact of his trying to persuade his people, even after they had crossed the line, to go to Wolf Point. Said he, "We will cross the Missouri River at Wolf Point, cross the Yellowstone, and go up Yongue River into the mountains where we will find plenty of game and hide from our enemies." Poor old fellow! He little knows that Wolf Point Reservation is right that these vast tracts of land should be open for settlement and the Indians learn by cultivating their ground to do with less. In their present state they cannot see the justice of this course and still feel that their wrongs call for vengeance. I think the government should be very strict in carrying out treaties after they have set the bounds of their reservations there should be no trespass allowed more than on the grounds of the whites I saw sure they will be found in open warfare and kind and honest treatment consistently carried out (not sparmodic). Without the love for and the confidence they have in Capt. Clifford.

There is no a doubt had he been sent out he could have brought him in some time ago, for 11 years since Stating Bull sent a communication asking him to come to his camp for a talk. He said it was the first time he had offered to talk with the whites and he would not offer again that he would pledge himself for his safety until he returned to his home. The Captain could not go as the message was received just when leaving Fort Berthold for the East.

The evening after their arrival Mrs. C. went down to call on the old chief. He seemed much pleased to see her, said he shook hands with her picture last winter now he would shake hands with herself and give her his home. She was very highly elated with the gift, as there is not one at the post but would have been glad to have been the recipient.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By Frank P. Litschert

Quite a great deal has happened in Europe during the past few weeks and it goes almost without saying that there will be more crises and more complications in the not distant future. The enthusiasm with which the world greeted President Hoover's proposal for a year's moratorium on debts and reparations was dampened by the sodden and unexpected financial crisis in Germany. That the crisis was caused by the collapse of confidence at home and abroad in Germany's immediate political and economic future, causing a withdrawal of credits from Germany, is generally admitted on all sides.

The German crisis brought prompt action and prompt measures. A conference was held first at Paris, and the representatives of the various governments went to London. Short term credits were extended to Germany and the action of the world financiers, couple with stern measures taken by Germany herself, seem to have permitted the Reich to weather the storm for the moment at least. In the meantime it is hoped to be conducted into German financial affairs with a view to extending additional help to Germany.

In all of the negotiations of the past few weeks, with recurring waves of optimism and alarm, negotiations in which our own country has played an important part, one fact all the world stabilizing institution has been conspicuously absent. Small wonder then that a great many feel the country in America at least, are beginning to inquire, "where was the League of Nations when the crisis struck the rope?" So far as anyone has been able to ascertain from this distance, it was in the cyclone cellar in Geneva. Perhaps the reason why European newspapers have not been commenting more on the helplessness of the League in the present situation is that it is pretty well realized in every part of Europe that the League is a purely political institution without power and without influence. Only our own internationalists are still incensed on this point.

The Washington Post recently well summed up the situation when it said, editorially:

"The reason why the League of Nations continued to languish in its passivity while Germany approached the brink of disaster is because it was powerless to help. It is honeycombed with politics. Its machinery moves only in response to the conflicting interests of the powers which dominate Europe House. It is thereby thwarted by checks and restraints from all directions. The league has come to occupy much the same position as an elaborate scarecrow in an orchard. So long as everything it seems it makes a pretense of protecting pears but as soon as trouble develops it refuses to function.

"The world court is preparing to render a judicial decision on the legality of the proposed customs union between Germany and Austria. The court may proceed to examine with great care all the legal implications, but its decision will have about as much influence upon the course of events in Europe as the League of Nations had upon President Hoover's debt moratorium. That question will be settled between France and Germany. The last the league heard of it was when it was told to do would be to sanction the opinion prevalent among the powers that the league is a farce, and otherwise would be to overstate its master."

MODEL FRUIT FARM—We recently visited the farm of Robert Bedwin, on Pine Lake, in company with other gentlemen of this village Mr. Bedwin took pains to point us into every part of this beautiful farm, and we with our friends, were not allowed to depart until we had cleaned his board of its load of eatables. This gentleman can justly feel proud of his farm. Of grapes he will have marvelous quantities — undoubtedly six or eight thousand pounds—and of the choicest varieties. His peach orchard will yield from 1500 to 2000 bushels next year he will, no doubt, supply the Pine Lake Region. Everything about the premises denotes good management and mature judgment.

FIFTY YEARS AGO

SITTING BULL'S SURRENDER

Fort Buford, D. T., July 28, '81

Dear Sentinel: On the 17th inst. I was ordered out to meet Sitting Bull, who, under the guidance of Mr. John Lewis Legare, had promised to come to Fort Buford and surrender to the United States authorities.

Mr. Legare had written to the commanding officer of Fort Buford saying, "I am on my way to Buford with Sitting Bull and 200 of his people, but it is a rough crowd and I am nearly out of food. Please send me rations. I don't know whether I will succeed in getting the old man in or not. He is very independent."

Accordingly six wagons were loaded with rations and on the forenoon of the 16th started across the broken, table country back of Buford to meet the oncoming or halting party of hostiles.

I followed the next morning at half past ten, with the white mail carrier, four half-breed scouts and one Sioux Indian. We were mounted.

After a few miles ride we struck the party that went out with the wagons consisted of five soldiers, six teamsters (every one of the wagon teamsters were not armed). My party of six made my fighting force count up to 11. In Sitting Bull's party were 43 men; they were however poorly armed and I did not feel the slightest uneasiness. Mr. Legare who is an Indian trader located at Little Woody Mountain, just across the boundary line, was very much worried, but my arrival with the rations removed one source of his anxiety, though he was still fearful that Sitting Bull might fly the track as he had so often done before.

All the scouts and mounted men however were instructed that this great chief never escapes again from the Canadian line until after he has visited Fort Buford. They each and all received this order as soon as the first one to fall in case of an outbreak. They were not to appear to be selling him, but he must always be under surveillance. It was all unnecessary — the old warrior had planned at last, not on his own account, but, because of the hungry murmurings of his people. They were reduced to the lowest ebb, and however obstinate and determined to hold out to the death he might be the cries of his hungry women and children were too much for him. There are no sick in this party; the weak and ailing have perished, only the healthy and strong have surrendered, and even these are dropping off one by one. Their favorite food, the buffalo, has disappeared from the country. Where a few years since thousands upon thousands of the buffalo and antelope used to roam, now not a solitary hoof-track can be seen. Another winter and there would not have been enough of them left to make a decent surrender.

The Sioux crushes may be said to be done. The one hitherto unyielding spirit that has kept up an unceasing warfare for 19 years, is broken at last. Deserted by his warriors, even the elements seemed to war against him. Two years ago his people had over 2,000 head of ponies by disease. Search for Treasure Hidden by Notorious Bandit 150 Years Ago

Athens, Greece—Treasure accursed by the executioner Ali Pasha of Tepelenë, who terrorized the Balkans 150 years ago, is being sought near Arethea, in northern Greece, where the pasha had his court.

Wrecking from recently discovered documents are fortune hunters have found a tomb which they believe holds the buried treasure. In the tomb they expect to find gold, silver and workmanship found by Ali and stored by him in years of plunder and loot, the killing years.

The episodes of Ali's court of justice live to this day in the memory of those who saw the barbaric executioner of the pasha's displeasure. Ali, it is said, was once the proud possessor of a beautiful wife. Her name has been lost to history, but from all accounts she was a woman of outstanding refinement. An accidental exposure of shoulder to a mirrored mirror of variegated colors shielded fragrant by the veil of her yashmak filled Ali with a violent rage. He struck her a slashing blow with his scimitar, severing her head from her body. Then he had the head taken to Washington by the war veterans and submitted to Dr. Warner Hough, one of the leading authorities on the subject. Dr. Hough could not answer before also anything like the color with the cloves. The designs are accidental and could not be copied.

Henry A. Clubine, above photo, World war veteran of North Carolina has spent many years in the study of camouflage and its practical use in concealment. An accidental exposure of chocolate that sprinkled a confectioner with a mirrored pattern of variegated colors shielded fragrant by the veil of her yashmak filled Ali with a violent rage. He struck her a slashing blow with his scimitar, severing her head from her body. Then he had the head taken to Washington by the war veterans and submitted to Dr. Warner Hough, one of the leading authorities on the subject. Dr. Hough could not answer before also anything like the color with the cloves. The designs are accidental and could not be copied.

Charlevoix, Michigan
August 10, 1931.

The common council of the city of Charlevoix met in the above date with Mayor Bergeon presiding. All sections present: Fessenden, Foster, Hooker, Kibbe, Smith and Webster.

Minutes of meeting held July 27, 1931 were read and approved.

The council listened to a very interesting talk by Mr. Fred Rennie, chief of Ann Arbor, Mich.

Alderman Hooker offered Ordinance No. 104, seconded by Alderman Foster as read. Carried by the following yes and nay vote.

Yes—All. Fessenden, Foster, Hooker, Kibbe, Smith and Webster.

Nays—None.

Ordinance No. 103

An Ordinance to license the sale at auction of any linen, laces, embroideries or cotton material or cotton and linen material sold by the yard or made up in any form; and to repeal certain ordinances and parts of ordinances relating thereto, and to prescribe penalties for violations of this ordinance.

THE CITY OF CHARLEVOIX ORDAINS:

Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, firm or corporation to sell, dispose of, or offer for sale in the City of Charlevoix at Public Auction or by auction or contract to sell, dispose of, or offer for sale in said city at public auction any linens, embroideries, cotton material sold by the yard or made up in any form, whether the same shall be their own property, or whether they sell, dispose of, or offer for the same at public auction as owner, or permit the same to be done as agents or employees of others, without first obtaining a license therefore as provided by this ordinance. Provided, that this shall not apply to judicial sales or sales by executors or administrators, or to sales by or on behalf of licensed pawn brokers of unredeemed pledges in the manner provided by law, nor to the sale at public auction of the stock on hand of any person or persons, firm or corporation that shall, for the period of one year last preceding such sale, have been continuously in business in the City of Charlevoix as a retail or wholesale merchant of linens, laces, embroideries, cotton material, or linen and cotton material. Provided further, that such sale at public auction of the stock on hand of such merchant or merchants shall be held on excepting days, Sundays and legal holidays excepted and shall not continue more than thirty days in all within the period of one year.

Section 2. Every person or person, firm or corporation desiring to obtain a license by this ordinance shall make application to the City Clerk for said license and shall set forth in said application the time and place where the applicant will hold said auction, and shall, prior to the issuance of said license, pay to the City Clerk the sum of Ten and no/100 dollars for each day or part of a day that said auction will be held in no instance shall the applicant be allowed to hold an auction as herein provided on any day of at any place other than that set forth in said application. Should the applicant desire to hold two or more auctions as herein provided at different places on the same day, the license fee for each place will be the same as herein set forth for one auction.

The City Clerk shall issue a license as herein provided to any person or persons, firm or corporation complying and presenting the foregoing application and paying the fees herein provided, which license, when issued under this ordinance shall not be transferable.

Section 3 Every license issued under this ordinance shall expire at midnight on the day of holding said auction.

Section 4. Any person or persons, firm or corporation who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars and the costs of prosecution, or imprisonment for not more than ninety days in the city prison of said city of Charlevoix, or the county jail of the county of Charlevoix, or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, and in case a fine only shall be imposed such sentence may further provide that the offender, on failing to pay such fine, shall be imprisoned as aforesaid until such fine shall have been paid, but not to exceed ninety days.

Section 5. Each separate auction held in violation of this ordinance shall constitute a separate offense hereunder.

Section 6. All ordinances or parts of ordinances inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect twenty days after its passage.

Adopted by the council of the City of Charlevoix at a regular meeting thereof, held on the 10th day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-one (1931).

Approved: Arthur Bergeon, Mayor.
Attest: Ray S. Hamilton, City Clerk.

There is no longer any doubt that a mother bear and two cubs are living in the vicinity of Mt. McSauba. Last Saturday Judge Mayne's boys and two chums were lorrying on the east side of the sand hills and in searching through the bushes discovered three bears lying in a hole at the roots of a fallen tree. Three of the boys took a look at the bears and then "lit out" for home. Later in the day Jay Jones visited the spot and saw the tracks of the bears.

MANITOU IN MUD; ABANDONED

STEAMER GROUNDS SUNDAY

S. S. MANITOU STUCK IN CLAY BANK IN ST. MARY'S RIVER

TUGS PULL IN VAIN

Went Ashore Last Sunday Morning; Heavy Fog Is Blamed For Disaster.

Heavy fog Sunday spelled disaster to the S. S. Manitou as she was navigating St. Mary's River, near Johnston's Point on her week end cruise to Sault Ste. Marie, when the big ship left the main channel and went head on into the mud, where she was firmly held unable to extricate herself under her own power from her mud trap.

Unable to offset her own release two or three powerful tugs were summoned, but they, too, failed in their combined effort to release the Manitou from her predicament. After a continuous fight lasting three days the Manitou remained imbedded in the mud.

Passengers were transferred, for by-two of them to a tug Sunday and taken to Sault Ste. Marie from which place they returned to their homes by rail, and, of course, at the expense of the Northern Transit Corporation, owner of the Manitou.

The S. S. Florida, sister ship of the Manitou, entered this port Wednesday afternoon, taking the place of the stranded ship. In the mean time the sailing schedule will be more or less disturbed until the service can be reestablished.

Early reports indicated that the Manitou would be released from the trap in which she had been caught and for several days an effort was made in which powerful tugs were used, to release the ship without avail. Wednesday all efforts were abandoned. Officers and crew left the ship to her fate and unless taken off by some salvage crew, will remain where she is.

The Manitou received quite a sensation when she first came to Charlevoix in 1895 and entered the service running from Chicago to Northern Michigan ports and was always considered the ace of all steamships in each of the several companies at some time operating and running ownership in the passenger carrie .

The S. S. Manitou, according to official measurements, is 274.7 feet in length, 42.2 feet in breadth, 20.8 feet in depth. Engines rated at 5,500 horse power and gross tonnage 2944, net tonnage 1991. She was built in Chicago in 1894, in which year she was launched on the Chicago-Charlevoix route where she was found each succeeding year during the season of navigation.

Mrs. Joseph Howard, so far as we have been able to learn, was the only Charlevoix resident passenger aboard the Manitou when the ship sailed from this port last Saturday. Mrs. Howard was accompanied by her aunt, Miss Margaret O'Neill of Milwaukee, both making the trip to Sault Ste. Marie to see Mrs. Howard's sister, Mrs. Emory Pierce and family.

HORSESHOE TOURNAMENT AUGUST 28, 29, 30, AT LOCAL AUTO CAMP

August 28, 29, and 30 have been decided upon for holding the contest at the local auto park.

The first two days will consist of elimination contests and the last devoted to pitting winners against winners with the final winners carrying off honors as well as the trophy awards.

Contestants should see P. L. Tyler and sign up every day prior to August 28, who can also enlighten contestants as to rules, etc.

Ed Brink motored up from Detroit Thursday, spent the week end with local friends, returning to Detroit early this week. He was accompanied on the return trip by Mrs. Brink who visited friends here for two weeks.

THE SENTINEL FOR PRINTING

GOVERNOR BRUCKER HERE LAST SATURDAY

WITH FRIENDS PUT IN STRENUOUS AFTERNOON AND EVE

Saturday's program, sponsored by the American Legion, for the entertainment of Governor Brucker, and other distinguished members of his party was carried out according to the program worked out before the arrival of the gubernatorial party. Early afternoon was not particularly inviting. Cloudy, heavy weather soon something of a pall over this region. A little later the clouds gave way, sunshine predominated and made for a most pleasant afternoon and evening, a propitious time for enjoying a trip on the yacht Sylvia Gee, with the owners of the craft Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Gilbert of Detroit, now at their summer home 210 Park Avenue for the season. About twenty local people accompanied the party on the yachting trip, all of whom were served with a delicious luncheon.

The reception at the Belvedere Casino, according to an informal nature was attended by a large number of both local and summer residents. It was the banquet served at the Belvedere Hotel following the reception.

At 8:30 the gymnasium was well filled by those interested in the governor's address. In this he referred briefly to the same conditions prevailing in the state and this alluded to the quadruple murders recently committed in southern Michigan commonly termed the torch murders, and by inference indicated that a capital punishment law could have been used to good advantage by way of removing the perpetrators of the vicious crime from the sphere legally.

Some statistician states that the three criminals now serving life sentences at Marquette will cost the State of Michigan approximately $45,000 for their maintenance should they reach the normal expectancy in years at their present age.

UNSUCCESSFUL ATTEMPT MADE TO ENTER HOUSE ON LINCOLN STREET

Some one made an unsuccessful effort to enter the home of Mr. and Mrs. Garfield Russell on West Lincoln Street, one night early this week during the absence of Mr. and Mrs. Russell. The intruder—who—whom himself, unknown—evidently was frightened and left the house before he effected an entrance, but not until he succeeded in removing a screen from one of the windows.

Who was the father?
You can fill in the name.

Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Reagan, vacationists from Flint, are guests at the Manitou, entered this port Wednesday afternoon, taking the place of the stranded ship. In the mean time the sailing schedule will be more or less disturbed until the service can be reestablished.

NATURALNESS MAKES WILL ROGERS ONE OF GREATEST COMEDIANS

"The one thing that makes Will Rogers the outstanding film star of today is his own ability to make audiences forget that he is a comedian," the above statement was made by Frank Berrage, while he was directing Rogers in his new Fox picture, "Young As You Feel," which opens Tuesday at the Palace Theatre.

"This quality of his becomes very apparent," continued Berrage. "In several where Rogers is called upon to portray the simple human emotions that touch the very soul of mankind. The sincerity and convictions with which he endows a short sentence expect of a great tragedian. Audiences forget Rogers as a wisecracker and see him only as a human being confronted with emotion. And I know, for 'Young As You Feel' is the second Rogers' picture I have directed, the first being 'They Had to See Paris' and I have as with audiences during the scenes in which he is portrayed Rogers ever made."

Another favorite of Berrage's is in the cast of "Young As You Feel." She is Fifi Dorsay, who made her talking picture debut under his direction in "They Had To See Paris." In the present Rogers production she has the leading feminine role, that of a young French dancer, who makes Rogers, in the character of the old, non-bogous and dyspeptic millionaire's packer forget his years and troubles and rejuvenate him into a fast stepper that his two spoiled sons are sons outdistanced.

"Young As You Feel" is the talking screen version of the famous stage play, "Father And The Boys," which was written by the eminent Broadway and stage linguist, George Ade. The screen play was adapted in continuity and dialog by Edwin Burke, and according to advance reports from critics who have already seen it, the photoplay suits Rogers' homely style of wit and philosophy much better than any of the previous Rogers' successes.

CARNIVAL DANCE HELD BY AMERICAN LEGION A SUCCESS

The carnival dance sponsored by the local post of the American Legion, which was held at the Moonlight Gardens last Monday night, proved a complete success. The lucky number that won the Willys Six was held by Neil Fritzley, 507 Mason Street. Mr. Pritchard was not present at the dance, but was notified, shortly afterwards, of his good fortune.

There was an excellent attendance at the dance and a lot of fun was enjoyed. While the returns from the sale of tickets were not quite up to expectations, members of the post are well satisfied with the results of the venture.

William E. Severance, the probate judge of Antrim County was a Charlevoix visitor last Thursday.

Clyde A. Coulter of New York City, spent the early part of the week with his Charlevoix friends. Business affairs necessitate his returning to New York several days earlier than was his intention, otherwise he would have made a more extended visit.

GIRL INJURED IN ACCIDENT

Collides With Auto While Riding Bicycle; Thrown to Pavement

Shirley Partridge, twelve year old daughter of Mr and Mrs. Henry Partridge, was painfully injured late last Thursday afternoon when a bicycle upon which she was riding collided with an automobile at the intersection of State street with Park Avenue. She was thrown violently from the bicycle, striking the pavement with such force as to render her unconscious for a short duration and was taken to the local hospital for first aid treatment. Early reports from the scene of the accident were that the injuries received were fatal, however, upon examination it was found that the injuries received were painful bruises, some of which were in having treated with no serious results. She will be able to be removed to her home in a few days.

STORY SENSATION HAS NEW THRILLS AS TALKING FILM

One of the most significant and tremendous moves of American life started within the last decade from the basis of the gripping motion picture drama, "An American Tragedy", which will show at the Palace theatre, starting Sunday for two days.

Based as the first publication as one of the all-time classics of the American scene, Theodore Dreiser's unerring story thrilled millions. The motion picture, directed by the master of Marlene Dietrich's three recent hits, "The Blue Angel," "Morocco" and "Dishonored," Josef von Sternberg, is likewise the outstanding motion picture of these times.

Acted by a cast of unrivalled merit, the dramatic splendor of Dreiser's great story lives on the screen. Phillips Holmes, leading the greatest cast of his brilliant screen career, in the character of Clyde Griffiths, has made a name for himself that will live because of this one picture alone. Sylvia Sidney runs to new heights, that she emerges from her surprising success in "City Streets." Frances Dee, as Sondra Finchley, is beautiful and wonderfully sympathetic in the exacting part.

Phillips Holmes as the boy, torn between ambition, love and fear, speaks to the himself of the unwanted decision of Sylvia Sidney, as Roberta Alden. A scene of tender appeal opposed to his lessons of worldly success with Frances Dee's interests. Unable to shake off Sylvia and, other way, he plans to murder her by drowning her in a nearby lake. His conscience falters at the last moments, but an accident accomplishes his desires. Circumstances, however, point to murder and lead to Holmes as the murderer. He is tried for his life, deserted by his wealthy friends, except, Dee, and will end his career, if when he had fervently lives although believing in his innocence.

"An American Tragedy" is a powerful story, powerfully told. It is without doubt, one of the most significant pictures of the year.

MORE PRISONERS ARE TRANSFERRED TO JACKSON PRISON

Another large prison transfer of 50 men by the Michigan State Police brought the population of the Michigan State Prison at Jackson, Mich., to over a thousand—the largest any single penal institution in America.

The transfer was from the branch prisons at Marquette in the upper peninsula where crowded conditions made the shift necessary. New cell blocks have recently been made available at Jackson and additional ones are still under construction.

Capt. L. H. Harmon and five troopers of the Michigan organization made the transfer covering approximately 500 miles.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Doolittle, three daughters, son and son's wife, of St. Elizabeth, Mo., returned to their homes via the motor route Wednesday after visiting Mr. and Mrs. Jay Adams of Marion township for a few days.

MANY GUESTS AT LOCAL HOTELS

LARGE HOTELS PRACTICALLY UP TO CAPACITY

From the opening of the vacation season there has been a steady influx of visitors and guests at the various hotels of Charlevoix, and at present the hotels are taxed to the capacity in the matter of accommodations, and in some instances are unable to take care of the ever increasing throng of visitors.

Tourist cottages located on main highways have been well patronized from the opening of the season, while numerous out of town reports the close proximity of the lake as the principal factor in the success of the resorts.

Reports all in all indicate that the season will be a good one, with only a few weeks remaining before the season will be closed for another year.

FATAL AFFRAY AT PETOSKEY

COLORED MAN DIES FROM STAB WOUNDS IN FIGHT

The death of Charlie Johnson following a fight Sunday afternoon on Washington Street, Petoskey is being investigated by Prosecutor Emmett County officials.

Clyde Sprague is the mean time, after Mr. Johnson's statement in the fight is held by the authorities and according to reports will be taken before the proper authorities and will be called to answer some charge of a criminal nature.

During the affray Johnson was stabbed near the heart, dying a few minutes later from the effects of the wound. The cause is assumed that he drank some with fatal results, before the fight.

Those who witnessed the fight say that Johnson was beaten up by Sprague, who was assisted by a companion of Johnson's. Sprague is held by a representative of Michigan State College and are guaranteed in every particular.

This year the rams are more than ample for every need as the way from $25.00 up to $40.00 or $50.00. STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

A President Takes a Tumble

"WE DO not travel any more," we dourly arrive."

Mr. Hoke went on to comment on the passing of the old days when a trip was an adventure. One level every thousand of the journey, whether it was a few hours' flight of a few dozen, or a trek across the continent.

One of the most romantic periods of the history of the United States was that of Jackson, 1828, and the coming of the common man to power. That was the day of the stage coach.

The wives of the candidates took the campaign if one or the former did the rubbing of the anti-campaign stumps that filled the highways of America in those days of political ferment. One records facts many years after, although the account had at times any relationship to the truth. Of the events which followed Georgia Neese Clark Gray wrote in the publication of Indiana.

The town of Hermitage was sent from the old Hermitage home in order to be inaugurated from the capital. Mrs. Jackson was not well enough to attend. That night there was a ball in Gadsby's Hotel. The wife was invited to the ceremonies there. Her husband went alone.

Wealthy Convicts Buy Their Way From Prison to Easier Life of Camps

New York.—An investigation into a system of lottery whereby well-to-do convicts sentenced to farmed penitentiaries at Auburn and Lewisburg regularly for liquor law violations, and other fresh air, have been able to get themselves transferred to less onerous conditions in some detention farms such as those at Fort Washington, and Camp Monde. All has been under way in the Department of Justice for several months.

The new institutions in the Adirondacks, such a system was obtained by federal authorities here were enabled to come with the discovery of a letter in the pocket of Paul Ignatz, a convicted watch smuggler, in the Manhattan federal building. Ignatz was also a well-known mobster of the company, and Joseph V. Parrington, the government to the Atlanta penitentiary in April, 1929.

The two had planned party to escape, of assuming which were to be taken without a warden's knowledge. Ignatz was to pay Parrington and Parrington got the money only the latter was convicted for the crime.

Some time later Spencer Irish the federal prosecutor in charge of the case, received a note stating that they had escaped from the prison and were in Mexico. Irish was not fooled. He knew that Parrington would not escape and that he was a trusted man. He was arrested by the United States.

Parrington then told how the plan was to be carried out. He said that he had been promised $10,000 for his part in the escape. Ignatz was to pay $5,000 and the rest was to be paid by the mother of Ignatz.

America Was Once Joined to Europe

Paris.—The Abbe Moreux, eminent French meteorologist and scientist, had created intense scientific interest by reviving discussion of the theory that the American continent was once joined to the old world and, after the deluge floated away to its present position.

This theory was extensively during the early part of this century by the German meteorologist Wegener, who died recently. Accepting the theory that the interior of the earth is fluid, then the solidified continents may be great masses of floating rock, pushed ahead by the tremors of the earth by a ripple gradually diminishing tide.

The Abbe Moreux points out that the German scientist held that the two continents, when they were close together, fitted into one another almost perfectly, as though they were parts of a jigsaw puzzle. Examination of a world map shows that this jigsaw puzzle idea is not so far fetched as it would seem at first.

When the deluge came, Abbe Moreux says, the narrow gap between the two land masses, South America carried along leaving the wide expanse of the Atlantic between. The fossils revealed would form the rest.

The French scientist declares the theory is not new. It was first advanced by Pierre Termier, in 1909, and was published in 1911. Abbe Moreux, while mentioning no names on the theory, declares that it is now believed by all the Atlantic, such as the American geologists, who, they pronounced necessary, so has their floating mass slowly toward the new world?

It is indicated that the French academy of sciences may discuss the theory in its entirety, while organization of a mission to study the composition of the bottom of the North Atlantic islands is being urged.

Legion Would Push Work on Public Improvements

Chicago.—While the American Legion is constantly looking after the welfare of paralyzed, disabled, etc., the Legion now feels that it should give attention to the many thousands of veterans who are physically sound and financially disabled." This statement was made by Ralph U. O'Neil, national commander of the American Legion in commenting on the public improvement programs being planned. It is for the ten thousand Legion posts in ten thousand cities.

"Governments, reports show that there are at each Legislature's worth of public improvements planned and nearly ready to carry through," points out Mr. O'Neil. "But many millions of dollars worth of projects are tied up in red tape and money appropriated is lying idle. Since a great deal of manpower is required in construction work, labor's share of this tremendous fund either for projects will be in the neighborhood of one and a half billion dollars. Labor needs that money.

"The American Legion unemployment commission, headed by Howard Savage, past national commander, asks that each Legion post support in its own community needful projects so that employment may be furnished immediately. This will be to the public benefit for projects built now will cost far less than later when higher prices return. Further, money put into circulation speak to the benefit of labor and the community will not have to be spent next winter in hoopdoodle or relief work with the same men. LAZY OR BUSY DOLLARS

Advertising Executive, New York City

The difference between good business with everybody happy, and bad business with everybody sad is usually understood if we think about dollars as workers. When dollars work they produce — when they are idle they consume.

For instance, here is just a part of the work your dollars do when you make a purchase of a $36 suit or dress:

You pay the retail store $20.00. The merchant pays the manufacturer $12. For help, rent, light, heat and other expenses he also pays out $7.00. That leaves the merchant $1.00 for his own use which he spends with butcher, grocer and candle stick makers. So your $20.00 has gone right to work.

But it doesn't stop there. The manufacturer who receives $12.00 puts it to work by paying $4.50 for material, $4.50 for labor, $2.00 for overhead, and puts $1.00 in his pocket to be spent for food, clothing, shelter and his other needs.

Nor do your busy little dollar-ants stop with the manufacturer. The retail help put their salaries to work, the laborers who made your suit put their wages to work and the landlords spend their rents, the lighting companies, food stores and all others who do business with the host of people who are able to spend a few dollars or a few cents because YOU have started the ball rolling—all these keep the ball rolling until its force is spent.

Let's first it up and see about how much work these busy dollars of yours have done.

The clothier received and put to work	$20.00
The manufacturer	12.00
Landlords	7.00
Retail help	6.00
Labor	8.00

and start the whole thing over again.

Or, a total of money in trade and circulation due to your $20 purchase of $66.00.

There are about thirty million families in the United States. If each of these families should spend one dollar per day MORE than they are spending, the daily turnover in trade and activity would be increased by thirty million dollars per day, over two hundred million dollars per week and over ten BILLION per year. For every extra dollar that is PUT to useful work, three and a half to four dollars actually GO to work. And every dollar which fear keeps from going to work takes four dollars into hiding with it.

What can you and I do to help put American business back on its feet?

First we must look into our own minds to see if we are really scared.

Second, we must find out what it is that is scaring us.

Third, we must convince ourselves that we are not problems to be afraid of the dark.

Fourth, we must get a firm grip on our individual courage.

Fifth, we must act with courage on our behalf in ourselves, our community, our country.

With courage and faith in our hearts we will refuse to live cramped lives, refuse to pinch and haggle, insist to ourselves on better living, insist on having the things and surroundings we want.

With that spirit abroad, lazy dollars will go to work.

OUR MERCHANT MARINE

There has been a terrific slump in European travel and shipping this year and the United States Lines have been among the heaviest sufferers. When the Chapman interests purchased the Leviathan and other Government ships three years ago it was thought that the private operators would be successful. But it now turns out that the Lines have run behind twenty, or perhaps thirty millions of dollars. The Chapmans are still holding on, and if there is any way for the United States Shipping Board and the United States Government to see them through the adventure may come out all right yet. Everyone hopes so as the United States Lines constitutes the show window of the American Merchant Marine.

Congressional appropriations on behalf of the Government-owned Merchant Marine have exceeded $1,000,000,000. But the Merchant Marines act of 1928 increased the construction loan fund to $250,000,000. These figures indicate in a rough way the manner in which the United States Government is backing the American Merchant Marine. The difficulties of the United States Lines indicates that the whole business of American shipping is in a precarious and uncertain state.

Little is said or published concerning the basic cause which have made it so difficult to build up our own Merchant Marine. But it will be remembered that before and after the war tremendous drives were made by our Government, and by our great industrial and financial interests, to develop trade relations with Central and South America. Afterwards we became ambitious enough to want to get into the World trade.

As the United States became a World factor instead of an isolated nation we began to build our own ships and sail them under our own flag. Congress promptly passed the so-called "seaman's act," which amounted to nothing more than a measure to provide better wages and a higher standard of employment. It made it more difficult to make American ships pay.

But that is not all—the foreign Governments gave their shipping interests subsidies in different forms. If foreign ships didn't pay their way then their Governments stood behind them and saw them through their difficulties.

Well, the United States had mail contracts to let, and a few other ways to help American shipping interests. But that wasn't enough, and when the slump came the Chapmans were heavy losers. The Government was loaning great sums to that concern, and providing funds for building new ships that are now standing idle—but even so the United States Lines constantly ran behind. Just what will be the outcome is hard to foretell.

Speaking plainly, the great trouble with our shipping business is that the people of the United States have not shown very keen interest in the American Merchant Marine. Along the Atlantic and Pacific seaboards a small proportion of the population make it a point to patronize American ships. But millions of people in the interior of the country are indifferent to the Government attempts to establish the American Merchant Marine. The result is that passenger lists of our great Atlantic ships show that just as many Americans travel on British, French and German ships as on our own American ships. This is all dead wrong. On the other hand, Englishmen, Germans, and Frenchmen loyally patronize the ships from their own countries. That's the way Europeans gained success upon the high seas.

What the American Merchant Marine seems to need more than anything else is the support of public sentiment in the United States. The kind that Pope wrote about in these lines:

"'Tis education forms the common mind:
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

SAFETY SUGGESTIONS

Three elements must be considered in highway accidents—the car, the road, and the driver. According to Sidney J. Williams of the National Safety Council, each of these elements sometimes predominates, but in general the car is a lot safer than the highway, and the highway is a lot safer than the driver.

Statistics of past years cast interesting light on the accident situation. Traffic accidents among school children are on the decrease, while those among adults are on the increase, thus proving the value of safety education in schools. During the last three years the number of commercial vehicles involved in fatal accidents has gone down 19 per cent, while the number of private cars so involved has gone up 37 per cent. This reflects the beneficial results of education and supervision of drivers by their employers. An intensive study has shown that states with a standard drivers' license law have had 28 per cent fewer fatalities than they would have had if the annual increase had continued at the same rate as in non-license states. Also, statistics show that recent increases have been entirely in the country. In cities the battle is being waged on even grounds.

Mr. Williams has put forward nine suggestions for reducing accidents. These include magazine, newspaper, radio and other publicity to impress the individual driver with his responsibility—a standard drivers' license law, rigidly enforced, in every state—psychological studies of the mental or personal causes of accidents—regular inspection of all vehicles—a safety organization in every community to conduct educational work and back up the constituted authorities—and to make "cheating" in traffic as unfashionable as "cheating" at cards. These are sound suggestions, to which every state and city would do well to give serious consideration.

IT CAN'T BE DONE

There is one born every minute!
This time a young man in New Jersey decided to try out the old theory that a lighted match would be extinguished if quickly plunged into gasoline. Result: He is now in the hospital in a critical condition, his body badly burned.

Theoretically a lighted match could be extinguished by gasoline if it could be quickly plunged through pure air into the liquid. Unfortunately, it is impossible to fulfill these requirements, as wherever there is gasoline there is also gasoline vapor immediately above it. This vapor mixed with air forms a powerful explosive, the same as that which propels motor cars. In the foregoing experiment the lighted match had to pass through a layer of vapor mixed with air which immediately exploded and covered the victim with flaming gasoline.

As an interesting sidelight of this experiment, The National Board of Fire Underwriters reported a 1929 fire loss of $15,500,000 caused by petroleum and its products and listed under the heading "Strictly Preventable." It also points out that people who attempt to do dry cleaning in their homes with gasoline are courting disaster.

Whenever anyone feels inclined to take liberties with gasoline he should remember that potentially it is nothing less than a death-dealing explosive. The vapor from one gallon of gasoline mixed in proper proportions with air, has explosive possibilities equal to 83 pounds of dynamite.

SAVING THROUGH INSURANCE

It is an interesting fact that but three cents out of each dollar saved by the American people is used for life insurance—while seven-eighths of all money, on the average, left by men when they die comes from life insurance policies.

Fundamentally the function of life insurance is to guard dependents against want brought on by the death of the wage earner. It is likewise an investment of the highest caliber. This is particularly true in the case of persons of limited means who lack facilities for obtaining reliable, disinterested advice on investments, and who, consequently, are in danger of capitulating to the blandishments of shady stock salesmen. To the millions of people of this kind life insurance offers a safe and profitable place for investment of savings. Any policy in any company provides for repayment of more than is paid in—and it has been more than 50 years since there has been a loss to policyholders from failure of a legal reserve company.

It is said that during the last 35 years life insurance has reduced pauperism in America by one-third—a record of beneficial achievement on behalf of the American people that few other industries can equal. In good times or bad, during prosperity or depression, life insurance affords the rock foundation on which millions of people depend for the future.

WE ALL PAY TAXES

Less than three and one-half per cent of the population of the United States pays more than 96 per cent of the federal income tax and less than 7 per cent of all corporations in the country pay more than 95 per cent of the corporation income tax.

The average persons, merely glancing at these figures, might decide that taxation is merely a matter affecting the rich individual, or the big business, and so none of his concern. But, unhappily, taxes do not work that way. If a company is taxed a dollars or a million dollars, they in turn find a way to raise the funds to pay—by passing the cost on to those who buy the articles or services it sells.

Every person in the country is a tax-payer. When he buys food, pays rent, buys gasoline, takes out an insurance policy or goes to a theatre, he automatically pays some of his money to government. The old saying that death and taxes are inevitable is truer today than it ever was. And, as a result, tax reduction, far from being a matter that interests only the wealthy few, is a matter of tremendous personal importance to each of us.

THE GOVERNMENT AS DICTATOR

The growing contempt for law is attributable in large measure to a mistaken zeal for more and ever more law," said Governor Ritchie of Maryland, a short time ago. "The government is no longer the creature and protector of our individual rights, but is rapidly becoming the dictator of them."

Few who are familiar with the course of legislation of the last quarter-century, will deny this. Governments, both state and federal, have shown a steadily increasing disposition to regulate by law the acts of their citizens. Reform movements, based on misunderstanding of human problems, have swept all before them, and the principal result is that the United States is now the most lawless of the great nations.

One wonders when we will again realize that progress comes from the individual, not from the state; that regulation of human conduct can only be successful when it is voluntary, rather than statutory.

RESPECT PEDESTRIAN'S RIGHTS

Concede and safeguard the rights of pedestrians—all motorists are pedestrians some of the time.

Pedestrians have the right of way on crosswalks at all times unless controlled by traffic lights and are entitled to full protection at all times. If crossing when the light turns they are entitled to reach a place of safety without hazard from vehicles.

Pedestrians should always use the crosswalk or footpath where one is provided, and should obey traffic lights. They should refrain from crossing streets or roads at unprotected crossings or intersections in the face of rapidly approaching vehicles.

Avoid crossing streets in mid-block if traffic is moving.

Avoid stepping suddenly into a street or road without first looking to the left and then to the right.

If walking on a highway, use the left side of the road facing the approach of traffic. If walking at night, carry a light if possible.

If driving cattle or other animals on the roads keep them well to the left side, facing the approach of traffic.

A naturalist says that bees are stone deaf. Well they may be deaf but they have sharp tongues or something.

THE GREATEST VALUE EVER BUILT INTO A FORD CAR

The Beautiful Ford Tudor Sedan

(F. O. B. Detroit, plus freight and delivery. Bumpers and spare tire extra at low cost.)

WHEN you buy a Ford car today, you buy what is unquestionably the greatest value in the history of the Ford Motor Company. Never before has so much beauty, comfort, safety and performance been offered at such a low price.

The low prices of the Ford is something to think about because it means an immediate saving of many dollars — always an important consideration. But far more significant than price alone is what you get for that price. When high quality is combined with low prices, you may justly take pride in having found a most satisfactory purchase.

See the Ford — ride in it — learn something about the value that is built into every part. The more you know about it, the more certain you will be that it is the car for you. It is literally true that when you "get the facts you will get a Ford."

General Miles last week visited Fort Mackinac, and as luck would have it, Rev. Eaton of the Boyne City "Herald" was there also. The editor describes the event: "As the passengers were crowding off there came pushing through them a posse of officers from the fort all in gilt-laced uniform, shining helmets, sabres and all, but we promptly they came out again headed by the commander of the fort on whose arm was leaning Mrs. Miles. Next came Gen. Miles and staff. He was dressed in a light gray suit of citizen's clothes. They were escorted to carriages and driven to apartments in the Grand Hotel.

In the afternoon they were driven by the commander of the fort to the principal sights on the island. On this occasion the General wore the grey suit of citizen's clothes, straw hat, russet leather shoes and brown cloth gloves. Mrs. Miles wore a dark gown of figured blue. As it was tendered by the military authority of the fort, last Sunday, in uniform, he was escorted to the fort with regulation salute of cannon and the usual reviewing of the small body of soldiers, only two companies of one hundred and ten men now quartered there.

A daring burglary was committed in this village, in broad daylight, on Wednesday. The circumstance surrounding the case render it an aggravating one, both as regards the loss entailed upon the victims and the chief it casts upon our police system, which has heretofore been the pride and boast of our municipality. But a few days ago a firm made up of Hetty Fox, Barry Dodge, Johnny Nichols, Will Buck, and a silent partner or two, pooled their surplus capital and boldly launched out into the current of business affairs. A call at their tent would have disclosed to the commercial man or curious one—all one-half pounds of candy, three pounds peanuts, two lemons and two toy pistols. Business was active. One dividend was declared and the house stood well in commercial reports. Wednesday three members of the firm were absent on the Board of Trade with Johnny Nichols in charge of the store. During a temporary lull in trade a burly ruffian entered the tent, knocked the young merchant down, seized the stock and "skipped." The stock was low and the thief could only find seven sticks of candy and a number of peanuts. Mr. Nicholls thinks he identified the burglar as from one of the boarts—is not positive which. JOAN BENNETT GETS FILM THIRD DEGREE IN "HUSH MONEY"

Joan Bennett, who plays the leading feminine role in the Fox production, "Hush Money," coming to the Palace Theatre Thursday learned the full significance of the famous third degree.

In one scene of the screen play, Miss Bennett falls into the hands of the police, in an endeavor to make her confess she is seated at a table with a dim light from above shining on her face, and grouped around her a dozen "dicks" with arresting fingers pointed at her, trying to force her to tell.

"It was so realistic, so brutal, one might say," declared Miss Bennett after the scene was over "that I had difficulty remembering my lines. I can sympathize with any unfortunate having to undergo the real third degree. I can readily understand how one would be willing to tell anything to escape the terrific mind pounding."

HOW MUCH IS TOO MUCH?

American women know the answer. They are smart shoppers, keen judges of value. That's why, instead of paying high prices for French names and fancy packages, they need more than three million boxes of Plough's "Favorite Bouquet" Face Powder last year. One trial will convince you that this smooth, long-clinging, fragrantly perfumed powder is as fine as money can buy. Always ask for Plough's "Favorite Bouquet" in the square shaped red box, the largest selling face powder in the world for 25c.

Counts Time Spent on Study of "Math" Wasted

I believe that an appalling amount of time is spent in the school in learning things which don't matter, remembering things which will never be needed, and doing silly tricks which an intelligent man need never waste his time upon.

Let us contemplate, for example, the shambling and abominations of arithmetic. At a conservative estimate, I have myself wrestled with arithmetic and its related studies through ten years of my irreplaceable youth.

I was, moreover, pretty good at it; I loved to get a row of figures and relatives who moved interminably around the bottom of the large page. It was fun to be engaged. It was great fun to be the center of interest, the cause of general attention and consternation of the group of people that made up Mary's family.

The slightest curious attention of the friends who were not yet engaged in my brain child was once full of arithmetic, but it isn't the case entirely. Except for a remarkable facility with the multiplication table there isn't a particle of arithmetic left in my system.

I can make change, but so can a street car conductor. But I can't remember more than five telephone numbers, and so long as they continue to grow I am safe. And those I won't need to—Donald Ross in the Forum and Century.

Salt Statistics

The man who "isn't worth his weight in salt" and the one who runs like an "errand" seem to be on a par, ranging from the salt statistics of last year. During that year, 4,800,000 tons of salt were produced and the total value was about $21,000,000. Much of the salt of a dissipated sort works out at about the rate of 20 cents.

HOW COULD MARY FIND A WAY OUT

By FANNIE HURST

(© by Fannie Hurst. WNU Service.)

THE conditions that brought about the engagement of Mary Estes to Benjamin Parke were the normal marrying ones of a certain degree of propinquity, similarity of social standing and a general comfortable united mien by families of both parties concerned.

In the thriving Middle West city where Mary Estes had been born and reared Benjamin Parke was regarded as one of the most promising young business men of the community. When Mary Estes was still attending high school and taking the commercial course which was ultimately to prepare her for her work as secretary to the yellow banker of that town, the Estes people were a highly respectable and conservative family in reduced finances, probably a shade or two higher in the social strata than the Parke family, although Benjamin's father was a dealer of solid standing and good practice.

The two young people of these respective and comfortable families, in spite of the disparity of ten years in their ages were thrown sociably together by way of church, school dances and bridge party. Their diligence engendered of ten years in the same high school, their accommodation looked forward to by a group of friends and relatives who moved interminably around the bottom of the large page, it was fun to be engaged. It was great fun to be the center of interest, the cause of general attention and consternation of the group of people that made up Mary's family.

The slightest curious attention of the friends who were not yet engaged in my brain child was once full of arithmetic, but it isn't the case entirely. Except for a remarkable facility with the multiplication table there isn't a particle of arithmetic left in my system.

I can make change, but so can a street car conductor. But I can't remember more than five telephone numbers, and so long as they continue to grow I am safe. And those I won't need to—Donald Ross in the Forum and Century.

Mary was not in love with Benjamin Parke. Strange, how clear the matter ultimately became to her. Not until after a long period of soft-shoe gossip, did Mary come to realize that, from the very beginning, she had thrown herself consciously into a state of mind about Ben. She had talked herself into a condition of seeming to be in love with him. The rain falling on the drought, she had deliberately tried to force herself into a state of mind.

The engagement to Ben had been the result of, but seemed to her, during those months while the facts of her self-hypnosis still lasted that she had accomplished right and righteous ends. And then gradually, and a little horribly, it began to dawn upon her during those festive weeks of limp showers, bridge parties, evenings with Ben over lime petals of their new bungalow, that everything she was undoing was dead sea fruit.

In the dead of night, Mary would wake up with a sense of oppression in her breast, with a dread of impression, with terror of what she was doing.

Mary did not love Ben. She liked him, she respected him. She admired him. The thought of him as her husband filled her with dread.

Sometimes it seemed to Mary that in her less sane moments, to be free to come and go at her secretarial work, to be the girl once more unhampered and undisguised by the mood of marriage, was the one state of being that mattered more and above anything that had ever happened. She regarded those of her girl friends who, with a sensible the pale of matrimony and still unhampered by ties of engagement, as very lucky girls. Mary Estes Benjamin was either lazy.

Here was the crux of Mary's error in life—to be free. To be unengaged. To see her life stretch before her, one vast expanse of nothing. An old trait of some days meeting the intimate life remembered.

To be unengaged was out of the question. Ben took her so for granted. Her parents were in their seventh heaven of approval. His parents made no effort to conceal their pride. The community assent. Mary was committed. There, relentless, spacy giants rose within her, only to be hidden by the calm, unaware exterior she showed to the world.

The day of her wedding approached and it seemed to Mary that with it there descended upon her a dread of living that must ultimately annihilate her. She knew that she must not go through with this debasement thing of marriage, Benjamin Parke.

And yet, what way out? What way out? The question beat about in Mary's tortured brain like a crazed, imprisoned moth. What way out?

She turned the question over and over in her hot, tired brain.

What could she do? How could she find a way out? What did other girls in the same predicament do? Postponements after postponements had made her ridiculous. Through they could marry a man and then, suddenly, or gradually, realized that lack of love would make marriage bearable.

But there was nothing to do. She couldn't do the only thing possible: tell Benjamin that she didn't love him. It would seem such a simple thing. Yet it was fraught with all sorts of impossible complications. It would mean bringing hot misgivings to her parents and his parents. She herself would feel that she had failed—so far frankly, to his family—to Benjamin said to her own word. There seemed, to Mary, something dishonorable in breaking her engagement.

So what way out was there for her?

The way out came in the form of a belated dull-scent to her one morning two weeks before her wedding day. It read:

"Dear Mary:

Since there is no way of telling you, without hurting you, the cruel thing which I am about to say, I shall say it in the shortest way possible. Alice McMahon and I were married at ten o'clock this morning.

(Signed) Ben."

"Policeman" Fired

Uncle Sam has one silent foe effective policeman who has enforced his ban on finding wildflowers and shrubs in the national parks, but so efficient has this "policeman" become that he has found it necessary to eliminate him at the time due to Superior Colonel park. The "policeman" is poison gas, which is unfamiliar in the average customer visiting the park. So many have the cases of completing laws that the poison ash has been entirely eliminated. And weed killer used to prevent its return.

Plants' "Signatures"

A pseudoscience strangely allied with theology, is the doctrine of the signature of plants, that is the belief that for every illness there is some herb with the power to cure it and that the herb bears the sign or mark by which it may be known against what particular illness it may be applied.

Bringing the Medical Profession Up to Date

That the amount now paid by the average family for doctors' bills will be substantially decreased when the medical profession drops its old-fash loned ideas about advertising, and learns to adopt modern merchandising methods, is the theory advanced by Ernest Elmo Calkins, nationally known magazine writer and advertising man, writing in Medical Economics, a business magazine for doctors.

In his article "Doctors Advertise? Why not?" Mr. Calkins says, "If a program of advertising could be instituted, shrewd is, and supported by every doctor in the country, for only would the incomes of doctors go up, but the cost of medical attention would go down. There are hundreds of thousands who should have a doctor's care who are not getting it, thousands who could have accepted elaborate treatment or operation if taken in time. Doctors should be paid less money but by more people. The entire United States should be under the care of competent medical men. The immense store of medical knowledge now available should be utilized by more people. The way to keep well is not through ignorance and luck. But by wise advice and knowledge.

"If people understood what it meant to keep well all of doctors would be busy all the time. There is enough knowledge today of medicine and surgery to greatly improve the national health, but much of it is unavailable to large numbers of people, through ignorance, prejudice and financial inabilities."

Twain at His Best

Mark Twain detested the autograph hunter. To a request for one he once sent this letter: "To ask a doctor or author or sculptor for his autograph would be in no way rude. To ask one of these for a specimen of his work, however, is quite another thing. It would never be fair to ask a doctor for one of his corpses, to remember him by." The letter was typed throughout.

FARM POULTRY

FALL EGG LAYING BRINGS IN PROFITS

Now Is Good Time to Plan for Hatching Pullets.

Winter eggs are not the most profitable eggs for the poultry producer. Full production of eggs is more important than winter production, according to an analysis of egg prices during the months of August, September, October and November and comparisons with the winter prices, made by H. E. Finch, extension specialist in poultry industry at the Illinois state university.

"In February is the time to plan the hatching of pullets for production of eggs next fall during the high price season," says Finch. "Next winter is the time for increasing the flock to such a size that the egg production which started in the fall will continue throughout the winter."

Breeding is the first requirement of pullets that are to mature early, lay good-sized eggs and continue to produce annually through the fall and winter months. Careful breeding is necessary before and more important still, several increases in feed prices have been made, decreases in egg prices. Feed is by far the largest item that must be reckoned with in the egg business. Any profit to be realized from the egg business will use substitutes in the profit.

Keeping records will make it necessary to increase the production of each hen if she is to pay her share of the feed bill and leave a profit. Hens that are not laying will use substitutes in the profit. Hens that are not laying will use substitutes in the profit. Hens that are not laying will use substitutes in the

THE MACHINE AGE APPLIED TO CRIME

Methods Employed by Criminals Demand New Police Methods, Bankers Association Official Declares.

USE by criminals of modern technological developments such as automobiles, machine guns and aeroplanes have given them advantages which old-fashioned local and disconnected police systems are powerless to combat and the situation demands a broader modern protection of State police systems, James E. Burns, director of the American Bankers Association in charge of its crime insurance department, declares in the current number of the American Bankers Association Journal.

"The Association's Protective Bureau has repeatedly urged the adoption of co-ordinated state police systems based upon those already shown to be successful in other states. We still have reduced this protection for our banks," Mr. Burns says. "The more we proceed when we can safely do more the disconnected and obsolete methods of local and small police. The advent of automobile and better roads to use nothing outside good air-planes, demands the same relative increase in police and field protection be given as against no more than the criminal."

Juvenile Police Plan Best

Juvenile police forces are a part of a Kansas police as saving to our system of courts and correctional institutions. They are not destructive of most present police conditions. As a system of law enforcement, it is as out of date as a common law pleading, both were of the same time. The methods, equipment and field police officer of the aforesaid are to many laws, are not effective agency for order of tonight itself.

"Every one the robbery experience of banks in the state making having their losses across the needle will point and of their wide public protection," says Mr. Burns. Last year, for example, there were 22 bank holdups in Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island and West Virginia which might have been prevented by co-ordinated, statewide police forces. Although the total is exceptionally high due to a single armed outlaw in connection with New Jersey and Pennsylvania, it is safe to state that half the number of particular bank robberies suffered in 1931 in Illinois alone. Participation this year of 36 robberies in the nine eastern States was responsible in Chicago, where there were 42 bank holdups, and in other western banks and 50 of similar stature.

BANK EMPLOYEES SENT TO SCHOOL

Modern Scientific Financial and Management Methods Taught Throughout Country.

THE American Institute of Banking, Section of the American Bankers Association conducts 223 classes or local banking schools in 40 states existing throughout the country, the large-city chapter has almost 4,000 students, who are combining formal theoretical and practical banking courses with their daily working experience and other places have these schools with a thousand to two thousand students in addition there are fifty study groups in small communities with some dozen enrollments. All told over 42,000 bank people are taking these courses—not only clerks, but junior officers and even senior officers in some of the more advanced work.

The work of the institute has been declared to be "a dynamic economic force, putting into banking a broadening, deepening stream of better qualified workers than could be developed merely by the daily workings of banking itself," and it has been suggested that every bank worker should be compelled to combine institute courses with his work. A great many banks now make it a part of the contract of employment that an employee shall undertake to render himself proficient and trustworthy in banking by taking institute work and others make successful progress in this educational aspect of banking a pre-requisite to promotion. Plans are being developed to make the benefits of banking education through this organization more generally available in the rural districts.

YOUTH LET LOOSE IN CLASSIC TALE OF AMERICAN BOY

Another rollicking, heart-warming juvenile comedy-drama, the third from the Paramount studio this year, will make its appearance at the Palace Theatre for two days, starting Friday next. It is the famous Mark Twain story, "Huckleberry Finn," with Jackie Coogan, Mitzi Green, Junior Durkin and Jackie Searle in the featured cast.

"Huckleberry Finn" is the further adventures of the lovable youngsters who won favor from screen fans of all ages in "Tom Sawyer." Junior Durkin, as Huck, runs away from home, in fear of his angry father. His father follows him, takes him to a deserted cabin, but Huck is rescued by Tom, and, together, the boys decide to embark on a life of adventure. The story tells how they save two young sisters from a pair of roving desperadoes, at great danger to themselves. This adventure brings them great satisfaction and honor.

In the cast of adults are two well-known character players, in addition to the talented actors who continue in the roles they portrayed in "Tom Sawyer." Eugene Pallette and Oscar Apfel give a humorous interpretation of the two Duperadoes. Clara Blandick is again cast as Tom Sawyer's Aunt Polly, and Jane Darwell continues in the role of the good-hearted Widow Douglas.

More than two hundred children were used in the production, a large number than found employment in either "Tom Sawyer" or "Skippy."

Norman Taurog, who made "Skippy," directed "Huckleberry Finn." A whole Mississippi River town, in the manner of the 1850's, was constructed as a setting for the story, with every detail faithfully reproduced.

CHARLEVOIX COUNTY CLUB MEMBERS ENJOY CAMP AT GAYLORD

Charlevoix County can feel highly gratified over the splendid attendance of club members at the recent Northern Michigan 4-H Club Encampment at Gaylord last week. the county had double the attendance of any other in northern Michigan, a total of seventy-eight club members and leaders being present at the camp for various lengths of time. The next nearest county was thirty-one in attendance.

The club members left Monday afternoon, August 24th, and returned Saturday forenoon, August 29th, having spent the time of their lives. Fortunately, weather conditions were favorable throughout the week all of which made the week more enjoyable. All the three hundred plus in attendance, in addition, many local leaders, in county extension workers were present.

The week was filled with demonstrations, various contests, educational features too numerous to mention, programs, athletic games, and fun.

At the camp the various elimination contests were held to decide what teams would represent Northern Michigan at the Michigan State Fair. We are very glad to announce that Robert Talsiter and Melvin Samuelsville of Boyne City won a trip in the Handicraft demonstration contest, and the Misses Hazel Mosley and Beth Simmon of Boyne Falls also won a trip in the Canning demonstration contest. There is a strong possibility that one or two other teams will win a trip to Detroit, but they have not been announced as yet.

If you think these club members did not enjoy themselves just ask those who attended the camp and see what they say. Space will not permit a list of names of those who attended the camp, but we are indeed proud of this fine number who were in attendance. Of the number, thirty-two were on attendance through out the entire week, while there were nineteen who stayed two days or more.

Yours sincerely,
B. C. Mellenamp,
Co. Agr. Agt.

SCHOOLS TO OPEN MONDAY, SEPT. 14

VACATION DAYS WILL SOON END

A FEW CHANGES HAVE BEEN MADE IN FACULTY

School vacation days are rapidly drawing to a close and school days for 1931-1932 are just as speedily approaching.

According to information furnished by the Board of Education, Charlevoix schools will open Monday, September 14th, while pre-organization work is already underway for this event.

Some few changes have been made in the faculty, with a goodly number of the 1931-32 faculty made up of educators who served in past years. The list follows:

Orrall P. Bush, Superintendent.
G. F. North, Principal.
Mrs. Agnes Anderson, Commercial.
Stewart Coleman, Science.
Miss Helen Button, Domestic Science.
Ray Kipke, Coach.
Mrs. Edna Logan, Languages.
Miss Bea Ferneau, History.
Mrs. Ruth Dowd, English.
Harry Bingham, Principal Junior High.
Albert Bixler, Mathematics and Bank Director.
Miss Florens Miller, English. Junior High.
Miss Mildred Redfish, 6th grade.
Miss Olava Bittner, 5th grade.
Miss Sophia Manson, 4th grade.
Miss Margaret Pitch, 3rd grade.
Miss Florence Little, 2nd grade.
Miss Vera Belding, 1st grade.
Miss Helen French, Kindergarten.
Miss Elizabeth Garage, Upperite room.
Miss Jeanne Ibset, Physical Education.
Miss Esther May Atkinson, Music.
Walter Wissenkorper, Manual arts
Miss Pearl Bigge, Normal Training School.
Mrs. Gertrude Dick, Normal Training School.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

Sunday Service 10:45 a. m.
Subject for August 30: "Christ Jesus."
Service Wednesday at 7:45 p. m.
Reading Room Tuesday and Saturday 2:00 to 5:00 p. m.
The public is cordially invited to attend our services and use our reading room.
"Mind" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, August 23.
Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding" (Prov. 3:13).
The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Belief is a material basis from which may be deduced all rationality, is slowly yielding to the idea of a metaphysical basis, looking away from matter to Mind as the cause of every effect" (p. 268.)

B. C. Mellencamp, county agricultural agent made the trip to St. James Tuesday morning on business connected with his duties in the department he represents.

BRIDE AND GROOM HERE ON HONEYMOON

Mr. and Mrs. John E. Kelderhouse are spending their honeymoon as guests of the genious parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Kelderhouse, 114 Palmer Street in this city.

Prior to the wedding ceremony, Saturday, August 15th, which was performed by Rev. C. Claud Clevis in Chicago, the bride was Miss Orene Hayes of Minneapolis, Minn.

The groom for many years resided in this city where he is well and favorably known, and a graduate of C. H. S., Class of 1926.

The young couple motored to Charlevoix from Chicago via Wisconsin and northern Michigan. They will make their home in Muskegon, where for the past four years Mr. Kelderhouse has been in the coast guard service, leaving for that city Friday of this week, taking with them the best wishes of many friends for long years of happiness and prosperity.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to extend our thanks to those who so kindly and sympathetically remembered us during our mother's illness, Mrs. John Miller, and our late lamented father, as well as to those who assisted at the funeral service.

The Family Members.

Mr. Albert Young, Grand Master of the F. & A. M. Grand Lodge of Michigan, who lives at Escanaba, was a Charlevoix visitor last Tuesday forenoon. The Grand Master was motoring to southern Michigan and when here, paid his respects to W. C. Bellinger, W. M. of the local order.

Mrs. Eugene Lampard and daughter, Patricia Ann, of Muskegon visited Charlevoix friends for a day or two early this week before continuing her trip to St. James Wednesday morning.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Robinson, daughters, Mary Margaret and Rosemary, accompanied by Mrs. Margaret Allard, motored up from Grand Rapids early this week to visit relatives for a few days. Mrs. Robinson formerly lived in Charlevoix.

Frank L. Baumgardner of Toledo, Ohio, an annual visitor to Charlevoix for more than a generation of time arrived here Sunday morning and has been busy either renewing acquaintances or engaged on the golf course, when not sleeping, since his appearance here.

Mort Orvis motored up from Flint Monday and returned Tuesday accompanied by Mrs. Mortimer and Gordon on the trip home. Mrs. Hersh and children have been guests of her mother, Mrs. Charles J. Zeitler and other Charlevoix relatives and friends for several weeks.

Mrs. Thomas J. McInerney and Mrs. Helen Monroe of Winnetka, Ill., were Charlevoix visitors over the week end.

Frank Pettit, Frank Reed and H. Bandle, from the southern Michigan were guests of Dr and Mrs. C. J. Winder last week.

Mr. C. Horace Kiracofe and son Melville K. of Huntington, Indiana, spent several days here recently. They came via the Wisconsin route to Michigan, visiting points of interest above the Straits before making Charlevoix their headquarters for a few days.

TRIO ENTERTAIN AT INN SUNDAY EVE

Margaret Grover Tagmore, Signor Lizzel, Dorothy Halstead, Artists

Margaret Grover Tagmore, Signor Lizzel accompanied by Dorothy Halstead were the entertaining artists, each performing their individual parts with perfection and with technique rarely exhibited in this region, while the demonstration by Signor Lizzel as harpist was both excellent and masterful.

Taken all in all the entertainment was a quality production, consisting meritorious and a delight to those privileged to be present at the recital.

AUCTIONEER INTERESTING.

As an auctioneer, Harry Hamra, in charge of the eastern sales for the Cory and Belgian Lace Shops demonstrated his ability and popularity with the Charlevoix public during the 1930 season. As a result he is here again this season representing the two firms in a manner eminently satisfactory to all concerned.

Sales are conducted daily at 103 Bridge Street, where articles from the stocks of both business houses are offered to bidders. During the past winter Mr. Hamra was engaged in the same work on Michigan Boulevard, Chicago, where, the same as in Charlevoix, he held his audiences by the use of good judgment and interspersing with his sales talk a sprinkling of wit and good humor. In this he is successful, so much so that next season he will be here and working along the same line as at present.

Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Fiedler motored up from Chicago and spent the week end at their cottage "Bedlief" on the grounds of the Belvedere Club, returning to Chicago early this week.

TWO EX-DOCTORS CAST WITH TWELVETREES IN PATHE PRODUCTION

A call for a doctor during the filming of "A Woman of Experience," the RKO Pathe production with Helen Twelvetrees as the star, coming Friday and Saturday to the Palace Theatre, would probably have brought Lew Cody and H. B. Warner running, for both these members of the cast started out with a medical career in mind. Cody attended McGill University in Montreal and Warner was schooled in a medical college in London. They both turned their backs on pills and bandages for stage-paint and applause.

Another coincidence in the careers of these two well-known screen stars is that they both went to Hollywood from the New York stage at the instance of the late Thomas H. Ince where their screen careers started.

Warren Hymer, wise-cracking tough guy of many taut Fox successes, is co-starred with Spencer Tracy in, "Goldie," boisterous he-man, hairy-chested comedy of sailor life and love which comes to the Palace Theatre Thursday. Jean Harlow, platinum blonde of "Iiell's Angels" fame, portrays the title role. Benjamin Stoloff directed.

ATTORNEY E. N. CLINK OPERATED ON WEDNESDAY

E. N. Clink of East Jordan, one of the best known as well as one of the most prominent attorneys in this region entered Lockwood hospital for treatment Monday night. Wednesday surgeons performed a major operation for him the nature of which has not been divulged.

The chief surgeon states that Mr. Clink's condition was serious, bordering on the critical, Wednesday night, and that some days must elapse before the result of the operation can be accurately determined.

CHANGE OF TIME IN CIRCUIT COURT

All parties please note that on and after Sept. 1st, 1931 sessions for the Circuit Court for the 33th Judicial Circuit will be conducted on Eastern Standard Time. Opening hours of Court will be regularly at 9:30 a. m., E. S. T.

Respectfully,
PARM C. GILBERT,
Circuit Judge

Rev. C. E. Taggart, for some years past in charge of the Congregational society at Reed City, formerly pastor of the Charlevoix Church for a long term was a guest of local friends over the week end.

LEGION FAIR AT HI GYM

ANOTHER GOOD TIME PLANNED AT POPULAR PRICES

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER FIRST

Affair Will Bring To A Close This Season's Activities.

Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 526, American Legion, is planning a carnival dance and fair to be held at the high school gymnasium on Tuesday evening, September 1, 1931, with Westaff's orchestra furnishing the music.

This dance and fair will be at the usual popular prices and will be in the nature of a smashing good time and wind-up of the summer's activities. There will be dances, both round and square and many valuable articles will be given away as well as foodstuffs. You may win a ham or a side of bacon or a blanket, or a set of dishes, or what have you.

Remember the good time you had at Jeff's the night the car was given away. This one to come will be even better.

MRS. J. MILLER DIES FRIDAY

END COMES AT THE HOME OF HER DAUGHTER

FUNERAL HELD MONDAY

Born in Ireland; Came From Canada To United States in 1869

Funeral service with Rev. J. E. Lockyer officiating was held for Mrs. John Miller at the First M. E. Church Monday afternoon.

Mrs. Miller was a native of Ireland. She was born May 1st, 1851 and when three years old came to Canada with her parents and to the United States in 1869 and since that time has resided mainly in Charlevoix.

She is survived by four daughters, Mrs. William Muntings, of Racine, Wisconsin; Mrs. Louis Allard, Mrs. Robert MacDonald and Mrs. Francis Gallagher of Charlevoix, also by three sons, Frank Cheney and Jay Cameron of Charlevoix and George Cheney of St. Louis, Missouri.

Mrs. Miller passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Francis Gallagher, with whom she has been making her home for some time, Friday afternoon, her death following a prolonged illness.

MAX MARCIN HIT, "SILENCE" IS REAL FILM MELODRAMA

One-Time Broadway Sensation Written, Directed for Films by Well-Known Author.

"Silence," which a few years ago thrilled Broadway audiences on the stage, has been brought to the screen in a production under the direction of Max Marcin, its author, and Louis Gasnier, and will show at the Palace Theatre here, for two days, beginning Sunday next.

The thrilling melodrama which has stood the test of time has been filmed with Clive Brook playing the role which H. B. Warner made famous on the stage. Marjorie Rambeau and Peggy Shannon have the chief feminine parts, and handsome Charles Starrett, who played opposite Miriam Hopkins in "Fast and Loose," carries the juvenile role.

"Silence" is the story of a likable and handsome crook whose crimes bring ruin and death to the woman he loves. His daughter, while a baby, is taken from him, and brought up in the home of a kind foster-father. Years later, the crook, still pursuing his lawless career, meets his daughter. When the girl is threatened with disgrace and ruin because of her real father's past, the crook, by a great sacrifice, attempts to shield her. Only the girl's great love and courage save him from death.

Clive Brook plays the central character of the crook, and flaming-haired Peggy Shannon, who made her screen debut in "The Secret Call," plays two roles in "Silence." She is seen as the wife and daughter of Clive Brook, but the two characters never meet in the story action. The plot covers a period of twenty years, the early sequences going to the prewar days of hobble skirts, embryo automobiles and beer gardens for four times a year to prevent heavy losses from parasitic infestation.

DIRECTOR OF FILM "HOLIDAY" MADE NEW INA CLAIRE PICTURE

Edward H. Griffith, the director who was largely responsible for the success of "Paris Bound" and "Holiday", both RKO Pathe pictures starring Ann Harding, directed Ina Claire's new picture, "Rebound."

Since the picture combines the smart comedy vein of "Holiday" with the more dramatic element of "Paris Bound," it was particularly suited to Mr. Griffith who made them both.

Supporting Ina Claire in this new screen play, which opens at the Palace Theatre Tuesday and Wednesday are Robert Ames, Robert Williams, Myrna Loy, Leigh Allen, Walter Walker, and Louise Closser Hale.

WHAT OTHERS THINK

The expression of politics are oftimes cruel and heart-rending explanation. The action of Governor Brucker refusing Frank A. Kenyon, for many years superintendent of Mackinac Island, shows how tragically hard pressed he has been to find places for his political friends. To our mind the dismissal of Kenyon is perhaps the most unfortunate for Michigan of any of the changes he has felt compelled to make. Mr. Kenyon has been a most useful public official. The following paragraph from the Mackinac Island correspondence of the Sturgis Republican News, and in the okay of everyone who has in any way followed his management of this historical state property:

Throughout his time he has been an unobtrusive and modest constructive administrator of his charge, but a continual worker for the guardianship of the important property under his charge, and a promoter of the welfare of Mackinac Island, for material improvements to which, in multifarious ways, the city is deeply indebted to him in an obligation of gratitude.—Charlotte Republican Tribune.

Mrs. T. C. Finoran of Grand Rapids is visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. W. Weaver, and other local friends.

Dr and Mrs. B. Franklin Weaver returned to Farmington early this week after spending a two weeks vacation with Charlevoix relatives and friends in this region.

Marcia, a well-known Broadway playwright, was employed to prepare the script of his own drama for the screen, and to assist in the direction. Marcin with Gasnier, recently directed another law versus romance melodrama, "The Lawyer's Secret."

CHECK INTERNAL PARASITES NOW

Time Of Year To Be On Guard For Parasitic Infestation

This is the usual time of the year when sheep and more commonly the lambs are found dead in the pasture. Many of these deaths are unnecessary, but it is thought that parasites are the chief cause.

Parasitic infestation may occur at any time of the year, but the trouble is usually noticed in young lambs about the middle of the summer. High temperatures and sufficient moisture are favorable to the spread of parasitic infestation. Lost breeds can be avoided from internal parasites during cool dry seasons than during a season of the kind we are experiencing this year.

Sheep affected by these parasites are unhealthy, usually show a loss of flesh, are dull and languid, have a pale papery skin and move around with a slow lazy gait, and the infected animal is most always anemic. The death losses are small numbers in the younger animals as they are weaker and more subject to the ravages of these parasites. This makes it necessary that the flock be regularly drenched.

The treatment most commonly used by successful sheep men in this state is a drench made up of a combination of copper sulphate and black leaf forty. To make the solution use one ounce of crystline copperphate and one ounce of black leaf forty to three quarts of water, then this solution give the even four ounces, gradually dropping off to about two ounces for the lambs.

It is advisable to drench the flock at least three times during the grazing season as a preventative measure. Have you drenched your flock yet? If not, it will be to your profit to drench right away as it is quite necessary to drench your flock three or four times a year to prevent heavy losses from parasitic infestation.

LEADERSHIP

By George B. Lockwood

The late Senator Hoar of Massachusetts stated in his autobiography that up to the time of his retirement from public life there was not in the history of his state a candidate for United States Senator. The state legislature looked over the commonwealth and chose the man it considered best qualified to creditably and usefully represent the state. That any man should offer himself for the honor, much less try to force himself upon the legislature, was considered improper. This idea was fundamental in the earlier American conception of the nature of representative government. It produced leadership. Massachusetts, perhaps the last state to yield the idea that leadership in public life should be chosen as the result of their own insistent demands, sent to the Senate such men as Daniel Webster, Charles Sumner and others of little less distinction.

Today few people have little chance to make such decisions; in fact the idea is not feasible at all. Especially since the direct primary method of choosing candidates has come into general vogue sents in the Senate and House are usually sought with organized ballyhoo by candidates anxious to procure preferment. In such a struggle two weapons are most effective, money and demagogy—one or the other is pretty sure to win. The result of the system as compared with that of a third of a century ago is apparent in the lowered average level of character and ability in both the Senate and House.

The evil of such a system is that it produces not leadership, but followership. The candidate for either branch of Congress knows that in order to gain votes he must cast out his own convictions and proceed along the line of least resistance. To make a fight for an idea or a principle might make him unavailable. He must sail by the weathervane and not by the compass.

Not only does such a system make strong leadership unusual, but it visits its penalties upon the people who would rather be flattered and fooled than be told the truth, should that truth happen to be in conflict with public opinion created by propaganda, often from sinister sources.

Most of those who seek posts of prominence in public life must begin by giving their independence and self respect a vacation. Seneca in the days of the Roman republic, remarked upon the conduct of candidates for the Senate who went about back-slapping, baby-kissing, flattering and cajoling. "In order to become the leaders of all," said Seneca in effect, "thus they became the slaves of all."

We hear a good deal of complaint about our political and social system. When the people generally begin to exercise their own independent judgment in the selection of those chosen to operate the system, they will have a right to complain that it does not work. But so long as they are indifferent to the qualifications of those they choose for leadership, and continue to fall for the methods of those who batter them in order that they may later exploit them, they ought to be surprised that government goes on as well as it does. That there will be an early return to the method of picking public men on the basis of their qualifications rather than their ambitions is improbable; it will await a more general understanding and appreciation of the obligations of citizenship under representative republican government.

PATRIOTISM

The Christian Century quotes Charlie Chaplin, he of the baggy trousers and horseplay antics, as saying: "I have been all over Europe in the past few months. Patriotism, the greatest insanity the world has ever suffered, is rampant everywhere, and the result is going to be another war."

Such talk as Chaplin's is loose and cheap. No sensible man wants war. One grows weary in the reiteration of this statement. The nations are tending toward the estate of peace, but peace divorced from patriotism is unthinkable. Love of country is not inconsistent with the noblest dreams of several among peoples, nor are these dreams to be nullified and dissipated by rational preparations for a country's protection and defense.

There may be other wars, probably will be, but the danger of such contingency constantly is becoming less and less. To say that patriotism is an "insanity" is as silly as to say that virtue is vicious. The banishment of nationalism would be a death blow to the happiness and prosperity of peoples. Even an indirect agreement with unreasoning pacifism, subversivism, socialism, communism, syndicalism and the like, is to give aid and comfort to principles founded on force and evil. Any weakening of the national spirit serves as a canker at the heart of any real civilized authority.

One finds encouragement in the observances at the C. M. T. C. at Fort Thomas, when a group of fine Ohio Valley youths received promotion, having finished their three-year course. These be true sons of a true patriotism. They are men dedicated to the righteous service of their country and their flag. In reading their names one hears the echo of alien blood lineage among many of them. But they are Americans first of all, regardless of racial strain—Saxon, Norman, Dane and many more, but all soldiers of the republic which shelters them and molds them into men willing to defend their land, to serve and protect its citizens.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

AN INEXCUSABLE RECORD

The accident problem is of vital interest to every citizen.

During 1930 accidents accounted for the deaths of 99,000 persons, and 10,000,000 injuries. For these accidents the American people paid $3,250,000,000.

Only five diseases cause more deaths than accidents, and between the ages of five and fourteen, accidents cause more than twice as many deaths as the most important disease. The death rate from accidents in this country is twice as high as in the principal European countries. The motor vehicle leads all other causes, accounting for 33,000 deaths in 1930, followed by home accidents with 30,000 and industrial accidents totaling 19,000.

But there is a brighter side to the accident picture. Child deaths have been decreased by persistent "safety" education. Accidents have been reduced 28 per cent in two years by 1600 industrial concerns reporting to the National Safety Council. The number of commercial trucks involved in accidents had gone down 19 per cent since 1927. And, in scheduled air transport, the death rate declined 87 per cent from 1928 to 1930.

But when 32,000 people can be killed in a single year in automobiles, homes and industries, every motorist, every employer and employee and all other citizens must recognize their own individual responsibility to help reduce the accident toll.

THE WAY OUT

"We believe that there is a way out for the American farmer," said C. B. Huff, president of the National Grain Corporation, recently, "and that the key is organization and cooperation. . . . We believe that only through organization for distribution and sales on a national basis will the farm producer be able to cope with organized industry all around him, make his production profitable and maintain the individual farm as a current fact."

It is probable that the farmer has suffered less from low prices for agricultural products than from the fact that his share of the ultimate sale price has too often been extremely small. This is well illustrated by the dairy industry, where the middleman receives his cut of about six cents a quart whether milk is selling to the public for four cents or ten. The farmer is left to hold the sack.

A single farmer, doing business with a large dealer, is at an obvious disadvantage. A hundred farmers, selling together, are at less of a disadvantage. And ten or fifty thousand farmers, demanding a fair profit for themselves, have the advantage on their side. Mass action, both in production and sales, has made America's can industry what it is today. It can produce the same good results for the American farmer with reasonable prices for the consumer.

PATERNALISM CREATES HIGH TAXES

In 1928 the cost of government was nearly one-sixth of the national income. One day's labor in each week for the entire population went to the tax collector.

To meet the increased expense government has raised taxes—and has borrowed, which means still higher taxes in the future. Expenditures have constantly exceeded receipts, resulting in an annual increase in governmental indebtedness of nearly $1,500,000,000. Most of this may be checked up against the states, but now the Federal government, which for a few years made a good record of economy and debt reduction, is facing a gigantic deficit.

The principal cause of high taxes is paternalism, which means extension of governmental duties. The commission and the bureau are insatiable tax-eaters. Too many of us have come to look to the government to protect our health and morals, provide us with our livlihood and guarantee us prosperity. And when government seeks to do these things it must pay for them out of the public's money.

High taxes are the greatest enemy of industrial activity, employment, home building and progress of all kinds. Unless we demand economy on the part of government, and rigidly limit its power to the true functions of governing, the tax problem will eventually be insoluble.

FANATICAL LEGISLATION DANGEROUS

Demands for rigid anti-gun legislation are based upon a false premise—that a pistol or revolver, of itself, is a menace to the community and without a useful or innocent purpose.

Guns, and their use for sport and protection, are part of the American heritage. It is true that pistols carelessly or criminally used, are responsible for some deaths—and exactly the same thing is true of the automobile. It is true that a small arm may be easily hidden and employed for an illegal purpose—and so may a knife, a hatchet or a piece of rope purchased from the corner hardware store. Should anyone seek to outlaw the automobile or the knife, as aids to crime, laughter would resound from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

As a matter of fact, it would be impossible to outlaw the gun. Gun smuggling would merely become a profitable occupation to the detriment of law-abiding society.

This is not to say that there should be no revolver legislation. The promiscuous carrying of concealed weapons cannot be justified, and registration of guns sold should find no intelligent opposition. But to attempt to make ownership of a gun by a law-abiding citizen, illegal, is representative of a type of fanatical legislation that has been overdone in America.

ONLY A CRISIS BRINGS TAX RELIEF

A stir of concern in governmental circles in Washington, has occurred over the suggestion that a logical way to reduce the cost of government is to cut federal, state, county and municipal salaries 10 to 20 per cent. Over five million persons are shown in a partial list of public employes. All are citizens and voters. It is not at all probable that any reduction in numbers or salaries will result except by the ultimate action of the people. Once boards, commissions and public payrolls are established, little help can be secured from public officials, who depend on votes to hold their positions, to reduce official overhead.

An army of public employes is one of the greatest dangers that follow paternalism in government—tax-consumers can then control elections and in a large measure determine the income they shall receive from the taxpayers. Only when a crisis develops and the common citizen revolts against confiscatory taxation, is any relief secured.

BREAD WILL NOT MAKE YOU FAT

Women from 15 to 50 have a close relation to the problems of the wheat acreage, according to Joseph Wilshire. If they would be guided by facts instead of fads, he says, they would be happier and the United States would be more prosperous.

"I wish that it were possible to get a message to the millions of women and girls in this country between 15 and 50 who will not eat bread because they are afraid it will make them fat, and bring to their attention the seriousness of such unwise discrimination against this fundamental part of every meal.

"I know," he went on, "that much of the craze for the slender boyish figure has died out, but some of its misguided beliefs still linger on in the minds of these women. One of these is the idea that bread will make them fat.

"I'd like to point out to them that bread will not make them fat; that the kind of food they eat isn't important; it's the amount they eat—the number of calories they use up in work and play. If they eat more than they use, they get fat; if they use more than they eat they get thin; when the two are equal they neither lose nor gain.

"If a woman, whether she's 15 or 50, uses up only 2,000 calories a day doing nothing more strenuous than playing bridge or riding in the back seat of an automobile, and gets 3,000 calories in the food she eats, she will get fat, but not because she eats bread. She will get fat because each day she is taking into the storehouse a thousand calories more than she is using. The extra thousand calories are stored as a reserve supply of fat. She can keep right on eating the same amount of food and not get fat if she will only 'spend' those extra calories doing more housework or playing golf or horseback riding or swimming, tending flowers in her garden or getting any other kind of exercise she wants."

FIGHT THE FIRE MENACE

This country needs an intensive public movement against fire waste.

It cannot too often be repeated that the individual is generally solely responsible for the gigantic annual fire toll in lives and property. The fire insurance industry, aided by various public and private organizations and groups, carries on an unceasing, year-round work in an effort to promote better understanding of fire hazards, fire-resistive building construction, more adequate fire-fighting facilities, and building inspections. This work has certainly not failed—without it our fire waste would reach a far larger total than at present.

Fire prevention is mainly a matter of using one's eyes and one's common sense. If wiring is regularly inspected, corners kept free of accumulations and chimneys and heating plants cleaned and examined, the average property's chances of burning will be small.

Let's give fire the careful treatment it deserves—and by doing that, save the greater part of the half billion dollars of property and the ten thousand lives that the "red menace" now destroys each year.

ENCOURAGING LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Arizona is a state that believes in protecting and encouraging its major industries. When it recently let a contract for automobile license plates it specified that they were to be made of Arizona copper.

It may be said that a few thousand license plates won't make much of a dent in the copper surplus. But the principle behind the specification is a good one. Every state should do what it can to stimulate local industries and payrolls.

Story of Coffee

Picking Coffee Berries in Brazil.

(Condensed by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THERE recently developed some little coffee embarrassment in the United States Department of Agriculture. It is a kind of embarrassment to which all of us occasionally are subject on rare occasions when we listen to the well-meant counsel of our best friends about how to run our own business. Only in this instance the Department of Agriculture was not asking for advice. It was giving it.

There was about the accuracy of coffee grown this year a cry of doubt from enthusiastic connoisseurs of the morning cup. The coffee could be a good one, they declared, but from the point of view of quality it could not be the best. Although the crop was unusually large, the coffee would be tough and bitter, they said, and there would be many cups of it before a satisfactory one was found. Many of the coffee lovers threatened to refuse to drink the beverage unless it was first brought to their doors by the coffee grinder.

The coffee trade seemed to doubt its own steadfastness in the face of the storm of criticism. It was then that the Department of Agriculture stepped in with the announcement that it would undertake to educate Mother Earth to produce coffee that would please the most fastidious coffee connoisseur. Experts were assigned to the task. Within a few days after the announcement, coffee growers from various countries were writing to the Department of Agriculture asking for information.

Then, in 1927, the Department of Agriculture established a coffee laboratory in Brazil, the world's greatest coffee producing country, and began a study of the coffee plant and its problems. The Department of Agriculture also established a coffee laboratory in Porto Rico, and began a study of the coffee plant there.

Coffee is a tropical plant and grows only in countries within the tropics. Brazil, Ecuador, Colombia and Peru on the Pacific and Guatemala and the Germans on the Atlantic coast also are famous as coffee producing countries. Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Liberia produce coffee

First Used as a Plate

The coffee trees first had to spread from Ethiopia before the rest of the world could enjoy the beverage. Coffee was used as a food by the Arabs, who ate the berries with butter, lard, or honey, and also made a kind of wine from the pulp. Coffee berries were first roasted about the fourteenth century, and the habit of drinking the beverage spread from the Arabian people to the Turks, Persians, and Egyptians. Soon coffee houses were established in Constantinople, and from there the custom spread to Europe. Coffee was introduced into Italy in 1615, and in 1652 the first coffee house in England was opened in London. Coffee was introduced into the United States in the early part of the eighteenth century. Most of the coffee consumed in the United States and Europe comes from Brazil.

Story of Coffee

Picking Coffee Berries in Brazil.

THE first coffee mentioned in the history of the world comes from Ethiopia, or Abyssinia, as it was formerly called. Ethiopia is a mountainous country in northeastern Africa, bordering on the Red sea. It is the second largest country in Africa, and has a population of about 8,000,000. Its capital is Addis Ababa.

Ethiopia is the original home of coffee. Here the coffee tree grows wild, and the natives have used the berries for food and drink for centuries. The coffee tree is a native of the tropics, and grows best at an altitude of from 2,000 to 6,000 feet above the sea level. It is an evergreen tree, and will grow to a height of twenty feet if left to itself. The leaves are dark green, and the flowers are white and fragrant. The fruit is a berry, which ripens in about nine months after the flowers appear. The berry contains two seeds, which are the coffee beans of commerce.

Coffee was first introduced into Europe by the Venetians, who traded with the Arabs. It was first used as a beverage in Arabia, and the Arabs still prepare it in the same way that they did centuries ago. The berries are roasted in a pan over a fire, and then ground to a powder in a mortar. The powder is put into a pot of boiling water, and allowed to boil for a few minutes. The coffee is then poured off into cups, and sugar and cream added to taste.

Coffee was introduced into Arabia from Ethiopia about the fifteenth century, and from Arabia it was carried to Europe. The Arabs were very jealous of their monopoly of the coffee trade, and for a long time they succeeded in preventing the berries from being exported. Finally, however, a few berries were smuggled out of Arabia and carried to Holland, where they were planted in greenhouses. From these few trees all the coffee trees in the West Indies and Central America are descended.

Coffee was introduced into Brazil in 1727. The first trees were planted in the province of Para, in the northern part of the country, near the mouth of the Amazon river. From there coffee culture spread to the southern provinces, and in 1840 Brazil began to export coffee. Today Brazil produces about three fourths of the coffee grown in the world, and exports about 15,000,000 bags annually. Most of the coffee consumed in the United States comes from Brazil.

Coffee is now grown in practically all tropical countries. The largest producers, after Brazil, are Java, Sumatra, Colombia, Venezuela, Mexico, Central America, and the West Indies. Coffee is also grown in the Philippines, Hawaii, Africa, Arabia, India, and Australia.

Coffee is usually imported in bags, each containing about 132 pounds. The bags are made of jute, and are stamped with the name of the country where the coffee was grown. Coffee is also imported in bales, each containing about 600 pounds. The bales are covered with matting, and are stamped with the name of the country where the coffee was grown.

Coffee is usually roasted in the country where it is grown, before it is exported. Roasting makes the coffee more valuable, because it takes up less room, and is not so heavy to handle. Roasting also makes the coffee more palatable, and easier to digest.

The coffee plant is attacked by many insects and diseases. Among the insects are the coffee borer, the coffee leaf miner, and the coffee scale. The coffee borer is a beetle which bores into the stem of the coffee tree, and lays its eggs there. The larvae feed on the wood of the tree, and soon kill it. The coffee leaf miner is a moth which lays its eggs on the leaves of the coffee tree. The larvae feed on the leaves, and soon kill them. The coffee scale is a small insect which attaches itself to the stem and branches of the coffee tree, and sucks the sap. It is very destructive to young trees.

The most important coffee diseases are the coffee leaf disease and the coffee berry disease. The coffee leaf disease attacks the leaves of the coffee tree, and soon kills them. The coffee berry disease attacks the berries, and causes them to rot before they are ripe.

Coffee is usually grown on plantations, which are owned by wealthy men. The plantations are usually large, and employ many workers. The workers are usually natives, who are paid very low wages.

The coffee plant is usually propagated by seeds. The seeds are planted in rows, and the young plants are transplanted to the plantation when they are about a year old. The plants are usually set out in the rainy season, and they begin to bear fruit in about three years. The trees are usually pruned every year, so that they will not grow too large.

The coffee berries are usually picked by hand. The pickers go through the plantation, and pick the ripe berries from the trees. They put the berries into baskets, which they carry on their backs. The berries are then taken to the factory, where they are dried and prepared for market.

The coffee industry employs many people, and is a very important one in many countries. It is estimated that there are about 25,000,000 people in the world who depend on coffee for their livelihood.

POULTRY

QUALITY OF EGGS SET AT STANDARD

Factors Used in Formulating the Grades.

Three eggs are each "Grade" by candling in every establishment. In Texas there is no candling, quality of each egg is determined by its appearance when broken out on a flat surface, consisting of uniform white material and yolk.

Egg grading recommended by the United States Department of Agriculture, and now recognized by 40 states, is based on the condition of the air cell, the white and the yolk. Eggs of the highest quality are "Fancy" or "Extra." Those of next quality are "Standard." Those of poorest quality are "Trade." Eggs are graded by candling and the United States grades are available for the use of the commercial egg industry.

Consumers of eggs purchase them according to personal preference. Some prefer large eggs, others small eggs. Some prefer eggs with a large amount of white, others with a large amount of yolk. Some prefer eggs with a thick white, others with a thin white. Some prefer eggs with a large air cell, others with a small air cell. Some prefer eggs with a dark yolk, others with a light yolk. Some prefer eggs with a dark shell, others with a light shell. Some prefer eggs with a rough shell, others with a smooth shell. Some prefer eggs with a clean shell, others with a dirty shell.

Here Are the Reasons Firestone CAN GIVE YOU EXTRA VALUES

ONLY by comparing manufacturing, construction, and distribution can you determine what is behind the price tag on the tires you are asked to buy. Price alone is never an index to value unless you know the reputation and ability of the manufacturer and what advantages he has in purchasing of raw materials, manufacturing efficiency, and distributing economies. These are the factors that determine tire value.

Read the facts at the right—then go to the Firestone Service Dealer in your community and make your own comparisons with cross sections of Firestone Tires and special brand mail order tires. See the Extra Values you get by equipping your car with Firestone Tires.

Manufacturing Efficiency

Firestone control every step in the manufacture of their products—own their own rubber preparation factory in Singapore—their own cotton fabric mills—and their own huge tire factories—the most efficient in the world. With these great advantages Firestone save millions of dollars annually, which are passed on to car owners in Extra Values.

Mail Order houses have their tires built as a part of a miscellaneous assortment of production by some manufacturer who is unknown to the public. Mail Order houses are dependent upon others for their tires.

Distributing Economy

Firestone have the most efficient and economical distributing system through Service Dealers and Service Stores. Firestone know tires must carry with them the necessary service for the economy, safety, and satisfaction of car owners. Special brand mail order tires are usually made just to sell, with limited or no facilities for servicing the car owner after the sale.

They'll Parade In Fair Style Show

These charming mannequins, who will take part in the French Fashion Revue at the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, September 6 to 12, were photographed at tea aboard the liner Paris on their way to Detroit. Under the direction of Mme. Marcelle D'Orgay, they will parade in original creations from famous Paris styled salons. Below, left to right, Mlle. Germaine, Mlle. Babette, Mlle. Jeanne and Mlle. Josette. At the right, Mlle. Helene, one of the loveliest of the mannequins, is shown in an alluring gown.

VATICAN CITY HAS THREE HUNDRED TELEPHONES

The new telephone exchange in Vatican City, which was opened last November with appropriate ceremonies by the Pope has a maximum capacity of 800 lines, 300 of which are already in service. Thirty circuits are available for connection with the city telephone system in Rome, and there are six trunk lines for international communications.

THE SENTINEL FOR PRINTING

NOTED BALLET IN 'THE AWAKENING'

CAST OF 200 TO PRESENT SPECTACLE ON MAMMOTH STAGE AT FAIR

In a mammoth stage extending 250 feet in front of the grandstand a number of 200 persons including the famous Fanny Oukrainsky ballet will appear in the great outdoor spectacle, "The Awakening," at the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 6 to 12, inclusive.

Colorful scenes wrought by the latest developments in electrical lighting, beautiful costumes, silent and all that tower more than 40 feet in the air, soloists who have been starred with the Chicago Civic Opera, Los Angeles ejection and world tours, and a gyrotechnic display that baffles description enter into the production.

"The Awakening" carries out from the creation through the awakening of Christianity, the discovery of America, the liberation of the slaves, in which a most faithful likeness of the martyred president, Abraham Lincoln, is seen, the fashioning of the first Stars and Stripes by Betsy Ross and other land marks of history down to the awakening of the "gas age."

To transport the scenery, electrical effects and costumes for "The Awakening" to the fair grounds, thirteen cars will be used. In preparing the ballets of the rare track for the spectacle the whole ground will be increased three of railroad powder and dynamite stores and vast settings of fireworks, all controlled from a single switch board.

In the grand finale of the production, which will be lost over for the Chicago Pageant of Progress after this year and which plays but five nights in the country, the heavens burst into a blaze of color as though one were viewing a skyfull of Christmas trees.

FAIR PROGRAM SET TO DRAW RECORD CROWD

EVEN DAYS AND NIGHTS OF INSPIRATION AN' ENTERTAINMENT AHEAD

Record breaking interest in many of the features of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, September 6 to 12, inclusive, is manifested in the number of days devoted to each activity, according to Gilbert Budd Taylor, secretary of the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Detroit, who has announced the complete program for the seven days.

Each day and night of the fair will be crowded with two attractions to be presented by the Chevrolet Motor Co. of Michigan, whose 21 sections will be viewed by their diplomatic officers in full dress uniforms are among such features highlights projected for the Horse Show at the enlarged Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 6 to 12.

The Detroit Symphony Orchestra, in addition to its afternoon concerts each day in the grove, will provide the musical background for the colorful Horse Show events.

As the curtain raising feature each night at the Horse Show, royalty of the livestock world valued at $2,000,000 will parade, opening with a general display of the finest specimens in the various departments at 7:30 p. m. Monday, September 7, there will be receives of the Shorthorns of the Dairy Cattle Congress and dairy cattle division on following nights at the same hour, climaxed by a great variety of champions Friday evening, Sept. 11.

Entries in the draft horse department, next Thursday and Friday, are more than double those in 1930, while the Thursday listings are the heaviest in fair history.

Special cattle offered by railroads entering interest and stimulating to producers important factor in promoting a sound breeding foundation, and steps have been taken to assure the convenience of out-state visitors driving to the fair.

In his quick and illustrative displays, Mme. Germaine will distinguish between wines or fads of fashion and permanent styles and offer a wealth of pointers for the guidance of women who would be well groomed.

POST OFFICE TO HAVE EXHIBIT AT FAIR

The quaint part that the parcel post division of the commercial life of the nation has played in the progress and development of farm products, will be illustrated in interesting display and educational talks planned as a feature of a postoffice exhibit at the Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 6 to 12.

Many experts will emphasize the values of proper containers designed especially for the transportation of agricultural commodities by parcel post. Lay the public behind the scenes of the postoffice to show fair visitors all the how things are cancelled by machine and sorted rapidly and will obtain an insight into other modern methods of expediting the nation's mail.

An historical collection of many odd pieces of mail which have finally found their way to the Dead Letter Office in Washington and which have never before been placed on public view, will be exhibited, provided that Postmaster Charles C. Kellogg of Ingham county is upon departmental authorization to consent to their display.

YOUNG MICHIGAN DAY

All children under 15 will be admitted free to the State Fair on Young Michigan Day, Sunday, Sept. 6. There also will be free admission for these youngsters to the Detroit Zoological Park.

Polo Each Night At Horse Show; Invite Consuls

Equestrian riding is a world favorite across interesting years, a polo feat coincide with two chukkers to be presented by the Chevalry Club of Michigan and a special program by Coleman Cup Night, when 21 nations will be represented by their diplomatic officers in full dress uniforms are among such features highlights projected for the Horse Show at the enlarged Michigan State Fair and Exposition, Sept. 6 to 12.

MANNEQUINS IN FASHION REVUE AT STATE FAIR

ORIGINAL FRENCH CREATIONS WILL BE SHOWN AMID COLORFUL SETTING

For the French Fashion Revue to be staged at the Michigan State Fair and Exposition in Detroit, Sept. 6 to 12, the atmosphere of the most famous Parisian salons is to be provided.

One of the central fair buildings has been remodeled for the event, which promises to take rank with the finest exhibitions of its character held in the middle West. Situated in the very heart of the fair grounds, this half has a seating capacity of 1,000 and is conveniently fitted for such a display.

Here the mannequins, who will take part in the Revue, will parade on a raised platform, in front of which will be placed a number of gilt chairs and settees, and against a background of tapestry and drapes will be displayed the latest creations of the world's foremost designers.

The Revue will parade on a similar platform in the Paris salons of Lanvin, Agnes and Jenny, and after showing the latest creations of these famous designers will appear in the grand finale, which will be a showing of the costumes of the future.

Special music will be rendered by a string orchestra, and special lighting effects will be used to create the proper atmosphere for the occasion.

Those who will take part in the Revue are Mme. Marcelle D'Orgay, directress of the Paris salon, Mlle. Babette, Mlle. Jeanne, Mlle. Josette, Mlle. Helene and Mlle. Germaine.

Ninth Annual County Picnic On Labor Day

WHITING PARK WILL BE THE SCENE OF ACTIVITIES

SPORTS, RACES, GAMES

Boys and Girls Club Exhibits Will Be A Feature of The Event

All roads lead to Whiting County Park on Labor Day, Monday, September 7, when the 9th Annual Charlevoix County Picnic will be held. Everyone cordially invited whether a member of organization or not. Come one come all and play late. Forget your troubles, meet your friends and have a good time for some time, and enjoy the wonderful facilities that abound on all sides at Whiting Park.

The big feature of the day will be the Bunyan Achievement Day for the members of the boys and girls 4-H Clubs held in connection with the picnic. You will be highly interested in seeing assembled about 500 quarts of fruits and vegetables, jellies, jams, canned roasts, etc. displayed by at least 70 girls from all sections of the county. In addition there will be over 20 calves, and pigs also shown by our livestock club members. These will be judged and special awards given to the winners.

Also you will have the opportunity of hearing two demonstration teams give demonstrations on Safety and Canning," and "How to Select a Good Type Dairy Cow." Miss Hazel Bailey and Ralph Simpson of Boyne and Paris will give the canning demonstration, and Clayton Smith and Ralph Eckhart of Barnard will put on the dairy demonstration. Both teams have won trips to the Michigan State Fair in recognition of their splendid demonstration teams.

At one o'clock sports and running races will feature the program. There will be several new races that will be great fun. Wonders will never cease! The farmers of the west side have challenged the farmers of the east side of the county for a redhot ball game. The dividing line will be Ironton, so all farmers excelling in the great American past-time be on deck to "throw them past the batter." It is rumored that several hay-throwers handle a scrub bat. The game will start around 2:30. Surely no one will want to miss the big ball game.

Music for the day will be furnished by the Barnard Rural Band. They usually enjoy a fine reception and their ability as entertainers is unquestioned. The Band is under the direction of George Block and has spent considerable time free gratis in developing this fine young group of musicians.

A picnic dinner will be enjoyed at noon, bring your lunch basket. Whiting Park has wonderful water, a fine bathing beach and facilities, and most cordially invites you to enjoy the beauty.

All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy, so let's at least take this one day off and play together.

Yours very truly,
B. C. Neilsonberg,
Co. Ag't Act.

Mrs. G. H. Wallenstorberg, son George R. and M. Kirkhaven of Detroit are guests at the Elmer Johnson home.

Belvedere Ry. Station Destroyed

FIRE RAZES BUILDING EARLY THURSDAY MORNING

ORIGIN OF FIRE IN DOUBT

Rain Storm In Progress When Alarm Is Turned In; Many Townspeople At Scene

Fire totally destroyed the Belvedere Pere Marquette Station at an early hour Tuesday morning despite the efforts of local firemen assisted by a copious rainfall which was in progress when the alarm sounded at 2:45 a. m. One hour later the main part of the structure was in ruins as well as a considerable part of the connecting sheds, platforms and trestle work supporting some considerable portion of the approaches and platform.

The fire, the origin of which is in doubt, was well advanced when first discovered and alarm turned in, from general appearance when first discovered, the fire apparently originated inside of the building or possibly directly underneath the structure.

Regardless of the time and the fact that a heavy electric and rain storm was on at the time a large number of people were soon at the scene, many of whom remained in the vicinity until the station was leveled and in ruins.

Mrs. Catherine Bacot, Pioneer, Dies, Age 94

DEATH COMES FRIDAY AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

FUNERAL MONDAY A. M.

Many Attend Services; Survived by Two Daughters, Three Sons And Many Friends

In the passing of Mrs. Catherine Bacot, widow of the late John P. Bacot, Charlevoix loses a woman of superior ability and superior character, the daughters a kind and wonderful mother and all others a good friend and true friend.

Until comparatively recent days, regardless of her ninety-four years, she has attended to her household affairs regularly, promptly and just as efficiently as do most good housekeepers who do not carry one half her years. Mrs. Bacot's last illness was of short duration. She was in her usual health on Sunday, her illness developing Monday and death following Friday.

Her maiden name was Catherine Milner. She was born in Germany May 1st, 1837 and came to the United States when six years old, locating first in Wisconsin where she continued until after her marriage to John P. Bacot, which occurred at Sheboygan, Wisconsin. Mr. and Mrs. Bacot with their family came from Sheboygan to Charlevoix County in 1878 and located on a farm in Hayes township which they developed to a high state of cultivation. Mr. Bacot passed away twenty-two years ago and at about that time Mrs. Bacot moved to the city where she made her present home.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Arthur Hummel of Detroit and Mrs. Elisha Greer of this city and three sons, Thomas of Charlevoix; John of Grand Rapids and Don Bacot of Flint, all of whom with other more distant relatives from various points in the state were present at the funeral service held at St. Mary Church Monday forenoon with Fr. Fitzpatrick officiating. This service was also attended by a large number of Mrs. Bacots local long time friends.

REGULAR COMMUNICATION

Charlevoix Lodge No. 282 F. & A. M. will meet in regular communication at the Masonic temple Tuesday evening, September 8th at which time they will also confer work on the M. M. or third degree. A general attendance of members is desired. Visiting Brags welcome. Refreshments at usual time.

Lieutenant and Mrs. Winifred Sisson, of Louisville, Kentucky, were guests of Charlevoix friends last Friday. Lieutenant Sisson graduated from West Point two years ago. He formerly resided in Central Lake and is a son of O. H. Sisson, a business man of that village.

SOCIETY GIRL LOSES FORTUNE, GETS JOB AS SOCIAL SECRETARY

What do society girls do when their family fortunes suddenly vanish?

"Secrete of a Secretary" has to do with the activities of just such a girl—Helen Blake—played by Claudette Colbert at the Palace Theatre for the coming Sunday only.

In this story the heroine is even more than ordinarily hardened. She has acquired a husband who turns out to be a worthless fortune-hunter, who, as soon as he sees their money going, goes himself, deserting the unchemicalized girl.

But she gets employment as a social secretary for a wealthy family with whom she had once been on a par socially. The father and mother of the family treat her with the respect that her earlier status in their stratum demanded. But their young daughter Sylvia is just a trifle snooty.

When the British Lord who is going to marry this young woman arrives he falls in love with Claudette. Meanwhile Sylvia has been carrying on a dangerous affair with Claudette's renegade husband.

The situation is tense and the problems faced by the heroine are modern problems. She solves them in a modern way—and the picture is ended with a brilliant series of scenes in which acting and plot tension have full sway.

The role of Sylvia is played by Betty Lawford, who made her talkie debut as Walter Huston's daughter in "Gentlemen of the Press."

Georges Metaxa, Paramount's newest importation from the London stage, plays the part of the villainous husband.

Herbert Marshall, a favorite on Broadway where he recently finished a run in "Tomorrow and Tomorrow," plays the part of the British nobleman in the closing scenes of the play.

SUPT. OF BELVEDERE GROUNDS RETIRES

W. H. Miller for nearly two score years general overseer for the Belvedere Club and grounds resigned from that position a few days ago and is to be succeeded by Ed. Edwards, a Charlevoix resident of long standing.

Mr. Miller retires at his own suggestion, taking with him the good will and best wishes of the Belvedere Club officials, the entire staff of Club members and thousands of others who during past years have occupied cottages on the club grounds.

Mr. Miller's service has been continuous over a long term of years and throughout his entire period of satisfactory and wholly meritorious with the company represented by him the friends who have spent their vacation seasons year after year on the club grounds, the public generally, and retires to private life retaining the good will and best wishes of the company members, who all recognize Mr. Miller's ability as a manager and his fitness for the position held by him through the years.

Nanson Burns motored up from Plainwell Monday for a few days visit. He was accompanied by Mrs. Herbert E. Gould of San Bernardino, California, Mrs. Grace Levering of Los Angeles, California, Mrs. Archer Chauncey Stearns of Plainwell and John Brigham also of Plainwell, all sisters of Mr. Burns with whom they are visiting during their Charlevoix stay.

Master George O. Cline, for the summer vacation with his grandparents, Captain and Mrs. G. B. Wilson, returns to Chicago and his student work today.

The residence property located on the south side of West Dixon Avenue, known as Castle Lodge, was acquired through purchase by Earl Miller a few days ago. It is probable that Mr. Miller's family will occupy the same in the near future.

Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Graydon of Flint were week end guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Munyon. Mrs. Graydon is a niece of Mrs. Munyon, hence the visit to Charlevoix.

Mr. and Miss Ned Durance and children, visiting Charlevoix relatives and friends for about ten days, returned to Flint Monday. They made their trip from Flint via the Mackinac route around Lake Michigan making for a splendid trip and vacation for the family members.

HELEN ARMSTRONG WEDS AT NOON TODAY TO CLAYTON H. REDFIELD

Miss Helen Armstrong, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Robert Bruce Armstrong, of this city will be married at high noon today at the home of her parents to Clayton Hamill Redfield, son of Joan L. Redfield of Newell, Iowa.

The ceremony will be performed by the Rev. G. Russell Parker of the Congregational Church amid beautiful floral decorations.

Besides a small group of relatives there are a few intimate friends of the bride and her family.

Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast will be served, after which the bride and groom will leave on their honeymoon. On their return from the wedding trip, Mr. Redfield and his bride will reside in an apartment at Oak Park, Ill., for a few months, after which they will occupy their own home at Evanston, Ill.

The bride was a Charlevoix girl, having been born here, graduating from the Charlevoix High School the class of 1915.

She was at Harvard and Sargent's camps in the east two summers and received his degree from the University of Chicago, and has been employed as instructor in the Carl Schurz High school in Chicago for several years, where she has attained a very high grade of efficiency.

Mr. Redfield holds a responsible position with the Central Republic Company of Chicago.

The Rooster Sherman family left for their home in Oak Park, Ill., Wednesday. The daughter, Miss Betty and son Rubi will return to Olivette College to resume their student work.

Misses Margaret and Virginia Adams vacation visitors at Sequanota for the season go to Milwaukee from here to be guests at a wedding before they return to their home in Oak Park, Ill., where they are students at Lake Forest.

MAIL BOAT REMAINED IN LOCAL HARBOR SATURDAY

Due to heavy weather the mail boat did not leave the inner harbor Saturday. Something of a gale raged Friday afternoon and night. Saturday the wind moderated but was accompanied by an exceptionally squally day.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Riwanskiey are taking a few days vacation by motoring to Sebewing, where they will visit relatives and friends.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH
Rev. John E. Lockyer, Pastor

Next Sunday will close the pastorate of the present preacher so no better service for this last one, of intimate fellowship can be arranged than a sacramental service together at 10:30. May we have a large attendance of the membership and to join together in our privilege.

The church school returns for the next hour for its regular session. We shall meet this week at 12 noon.

An evening service is scheduled for 7:45 and the pastor will talk in a friendly way on "The Furniture Van and Changing Preachers."

The conference will meet at Grand Rapids on Wednesday next and the pastor leaves here to attend on Tuesday morning.

The final official board meeting will be after the Sunday evening service at 8:30.

Mr. and Mrs. Jason Milbaker of Sault Ste. Marie were guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Sweetit over the week end. Mr. and Mrs. Milbaker are old time friends and their meeting here has been much their first in thirty years. The visitors returned to their home, where Mr. Milbaker is keeper of the government light, early this week, with the understanding that visits would be more frequent in the future.

Mrs. Emmons Peterson after spending her vacation here with her parents Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Linsday, left for Reading, Pennsylvania Sunday, where her husband is employed.

Mrs. N. R. Broderick of Detroit is visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Myers and other local friends for two or three weeks.

SCREEN'S NEW FIND IS MODEST YOUTH TO BE SEEN IN "BAD GIRL"

James Dunn, who will be seen as Sally Eilers' persistent young admirer in "Bad Girl," Fox Movietone offering to the Palace Theatre Friday and Saturday, is the second screen find of Winfield Sheehan, head of production at the Fox studios.

Dunn is charming, gallant, and extremely affable, so his characterization in the picture is clearly convincing, and he plays the role with ease.

"Those girls out here are so darned silly-sexy!" he confided. "Why, the other day I was sitting on the set, and I'm not kidding, one of them fifty times accosted me, including the immortal 'Hi, Handsome!' Then there was the time when one was placed in my couch for examination and repairs if necessary.

MANY PEOPLE MAKE MERRY AT LEGION GATHERING

ELEVENTH DISTRICT MEET

To Be Held At Rogers City September 6th; Legionnaires Plan To Attend

The American Legion headquarters on East Garfield Avenue was visitors last night as several hundred people from the vicinity, town and nearby resorts who made merry at the carnival and time dance held a late hour. Brown's orchestra, one of the features furnished the music for both dancers and visitor dancers and many valuable prizes were won in the room adjoining the dance floor, where a "fish" was in progress.

Members of Leslie T. Shannon Post No. 226 were elated with the success of the entertainment they had sponsored, especially as every one seemed to be enjoying themselves to the fullest and the request from the "fair" attractions were very gratifying. The music was especially good and Floyd Black and Mark Saunders, as callers kept things moving at a snappy tempo. The pianist was Miss Romona Bingham, a Charlevoix girl, who has been playing over Radio Station WJR, Detroit, for the past year.

Next Sunday, September 6th, is the date set for the regular interscholastic meet of the Eleventh District Legion at Rogers City, which will be held at Rogers City. The local post members are planning to be there with a good attendance and the Legion's bugle and drum corps will lead the parade. The bugle and drum corps had a trip to St. James scheduled for last Sunday, but were forced to abandon it on account of the weather. It is possible that an attempt will be made to get over at a later date.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank I. Cutcy, one time of this region in earlier years, but for many years of Minneapolis, accompanied by Mr. C. Dwyer of New Orleans and Mrs. Anna Niemeyer of Bellaire, visited Charlevoix friends Thursday.

Many Mysteries of Ocean Unsolved

Whirlpool That Spins Outward Latest Oddity

Washington—Discovery of an outward spinning whirlpool in the Atlantic ocean is the latest addition to the count of the ocean's geodesic curves. While oceanographers have not had time to count Cape Cod, the survey vessel Hydrographer Dutton became man's knowledge of the sea, for all his centuries of study and experience in outwitting Neptune.

"Explorers are geographers who have come to the surprising conclusion that their best field, particularly before the war, When it is found that nearly three quarters of the surface of the globe consists of water. It is rather remarkable how little we know of the vast surface of the solid sphere which lies under this screen of liquid.

"Little wonder, then that man marvels at how much has been learned about the seas, the while he realizes that when we endeavor to reach less than the innermost drop in the bucket as compared with what remains a mystery.

"The most impressive thing about the sea is its shallowness as compared with the size of the earth and its depth as compared with the height of the land. If one were to take a globe six feet in diameter and excavate the deepest trench of the ocean therein it would be a hole proportionately deeper than the roundness of an inch.

"Among the sea's unexplained mysteries are the origin and nature of storm waves, currents of nautical phenomena, tidal-storm waves travel much faster than the storm itself, causing the storm as a whole, and sometimes they travel with great force on a short line where conditions otherwise are very quiet and serene.

"There is a curious superstition, existing in various parts of the world, that every seventh or every ninth, or every tenth wave is larger than the rest that precede it. Writers often take advantage of this belief, but seldom point to wherein, to illustrate this false picture of sequence in lines or lines.

"Much is still to be learned about the vagaries of ocean currents. Vessels and derelicts caught in these mysterious lanes often play aimless tricks."

NO VETERAN "RAID ON THE TREASURY"

The president of the Carnegie Foundation makes a violent attack on the American Legion and the Grand Army of the Republic on the charge that their political coercion they have "raided the treasury" to provide unjust pensions and other forms of compensation for veterans. He declares that the G.A.R. "was transformed from a patriotic society to a subsidy-seeking organization."

The Grand Army of the Republic has been the target of such accusations before. Looking back over the record of what the nation has done for the men who saved the Union from dissolution in the sixties, and thus made it possible for Mr. Carnegie to accumulate the fortune with which he endowed the Carnegie Foundation, few Americans will agree that the government has been too generous. One familiar with the operations of the pension laws knows how difficult it was at any time to procure for a veteran a pension to which he was not entitled. That there were individual cases of imposition in so large a number of pension applications is doubtless true, but that general pension legislation was unfair or that many cases of injustice developed under it, is not true.

When the nation, soon after America's entrance into the World War, set aside a certain portion of the population as obligated to military service, and permitted the remainder to continue civilian pursuits, and in many instances to personally profit by the war, it incurred a special obligation to those who were called to the national colors. It incurred a moral obligation for some adjustment financially between those who went to war and those who stayed at home. That the adjustment has been overdone to date no thoughtful person will be inclined to believe.

The money paid out by the nation to World War veterans does not represent a net loss to the American people as a whole. It comes out of the pockets of those who can afford to pay, and puts it into the pockets of many who need it, and who have a claim on the nation's gratitude. But for their service there would be no values in this country; the endowment fund of the Carnegie Foundation would be worthless. Some excessive demands have been made on the government by some representatives of the World War soldiers. But what has been done up to date has been moderate. The additional loans made on bonus certificates, described by the President of the Carnegie Foundation as a "raid on the treasury" did not increase the obligation of the government a penny; on the contrary since the loans are made to veterans at a higher rate of interest than the government pays for its money, it is a profitable transaction.

The Carnegie Foundation, along with some highly useful activities, has some of less value. It agitates for internationalism and the disarming of the nation. Its eminent founder, who made many noble benefactions, nevertheless expressed a wish for a consolidation of the United States and the British Empire. Certainly the cause of peace is not harmed when war is made more costly because our people vote on themselves heavy burdens in caring for veterans, and to some extent making up for what they lost financially by their war service while others in safety pursued their usual profitable occupations.

It may be assumed that Congress has done nothing in the matter of veteran relief that does not meet the approval of the American people, who pay the bill, for congressmen are not in the habit of voting for things they do not believe are popular. If Congress has "raided the treasury" to help the veterans, then it simply means that the American people, through their representatives have made a raid on their own treasury.

It is a remarkable fact that while in the United States we have some four hundred foundations of one sort and another, endowed to the extent of several billions in the aggregate, we do not have a single one committed to the cause of inculcating American patriotism—appreciation of American institutions, ideals and principles. There are many such foundations which on the contrary, are engaged in depreciating and broadly down American nationalism in favor of a futile and ultimately fatal internationalism. From such sources attacks upon the organized veterans of all our wars may be expected. But if there had not been men willing to stand between the nation and destruction in time of peril, and if the spirit back of their service is not kept alive, the endowment funds of those institutions might in due time become about as valuable as German marks were immediately after the World War.

OKLAHOMA'S QUESTION MARK

Alfalfa Bill Murray, the picturesque "poor man's" Governor of Oklahoma, is one of the current political enigmas that has set all the politicians in Washington guessing. His enemies say he is crazy. His friends say he is another Abraham Lincoln. To half of Oklahoma he's a menace, to the other half he's the Man of the Hour, sincere, and that, whether his efforts are those of a great statesman or of an erratic demagogue, things are likely to pop and continue popping wherever he happens to be directing affairs of state. The American Magazine recently sent its cleverest interviewer, Jerome Beatty, to Oklahoma to meet this truly remarkable man. He dined with Alfalfa Bill and his family, listened to his ideas on government, and talked with people who knew him.

Here is Mr. Beatty's verdict: "No matter how you feel about his policies and actions, you'll agree that you've seldom encountered a more provocative character, even in the pages of story books. He is 61 years old, about six feet tall, thin, weatherworn, and wears a droopy gray walrus moustache. His voice is clear and resonant, and when he spanks he doesn't wave his arms or pound his fists. Usually, when on his feet, he talks with his legs apart and his thumbs hooked over the top of his pants.

"Like most natural orators, he speaks much better than he writes. When he takes pen in hand, his sentences become involved and at times almost unintelligible. But nobody can misunderstand him when he's delivering a speech.

"Alfalfa Bill's enemies are to be found mostly among business men. They say he is crazy. His friends, the farmers and the laborers, say he is a genius. Nowhere in Oklahoma does there seem to be a thinking man who is neutral. His state documents present a curious mixture of statesmanship, inelegance, and the savage philosophy of a nonconformist."

Alfalfa Bill is a strong prohibitionist. But, he says, "The people are going to study first how to get hecktook and a pone of bread before they get heated up about liquor and how to get it."

ACHIEVEMENTS OF PRIVATE ENTERPRISE

"In 1941, when we look back to the days of 1931, we shall wonder how we ever managed to get along with such small knowledge and such meager use of electricity," said Loring A. Schuler, recently, in discussing "The Home Ten Years From Now."

This is another way of saying that electricity is still in its infancy. And that is very true. All the great developments and inventions and the discoveries of the last ten or twenty years are really but the preliminaries to almost unimagined future achievements. Today power lights our houses, operates our refrigerators and washing machines and similar devices, and keeps the machinery in our factories going. Tomorrow it will do thousands of things more. The work of the home, the farm and the industry will begin and end when a switch is turned.

The result will be, of course, infinitely higher standards of living than we now enjoy. There will be more leisure, more time in which to enjoy the fruits of effort. The housewife's, the industrial worker, the farmer—all will be immeasurably benefited by the increased application of power to daily tasks. It may be that the harnessing of electric power was the most important single event in the history of the world.

And this development has resulted from the urge for betterment that follows encouragement of private initiative and enterprise as we know it in this country.

THE MALADY OF SOCIALISM

In his new book, "The End of Reparations," Hjalmar Schacht, former President of the German Reichsbank, says that "The fundamental malady of the socialist system is its tremendous over-valuation of the machinery of the state."

Discussing the cost of electricity in Germany, he says: "In 1929 state and municipal works were in control of 53 per cent of the water power, and private industry of only 47 per cent. The result is that electric light and power are dearer in Germany than elsewhere, and that, since they are monopolies, the provision of light and power is used by many communities as an additional form of taxation. This happens also in connection with municipally operated street railways and with water and gas works. . . . In recent years there has been an increasing tendency in Germany to raise the rates for gas, water and electricity."

In Germany, as here, the municipal utility is tax-exempt, and is not required to keep books upon business principles. Losses are made up by taxation and, as a result, in 1930, at least 45 per cent of the entire German national income went into taxes and social expenditures by the governments.

Mr. Schacht's statements would probably be true, to some degree, of Australia, Austria and other countries which have gone in for socialization of industry. The Marxian theory, as a theory, has its good points—but in practice it seems to always fall short of promised advantages.

THE RAILROADS IN 1930

The complete operating statistics for the American railroads during 1930 have just been issued. To even the casual reader, they vividly illustrate the plight in which our principal transport medium finds itself as the result of high taxes, unregulated competition and business conditions.

As compared with 1929, the number of tons of revenue freight handled by the lines last year decreased almost 400,000,444. Freight revenue went down $742,000,000, and passenger revenue, $144,000,000. Car loadings were lower than in any year since 1922, number of passengers carried the least since 1905, and operating revenue the lowest since 1919.

The number of railway employes declined from 1,661,000 to 1,488,000. Total purchases for materials and supplies were $291,000,000 below 1929. Taxes were $48,000,000 under that year, due to lower earnings and the consequent decrease in income taxes. However, earnings declined relatively more than taxes, so that the percentage of revenue consumed by the tax collector was the highest in history.

The only bright spots are in the continued increase in operating efficiency. Several new speed and economy records were established and further progress was made in safety, both for passengers and employes.

In the interest of American progress and prosperity a way must be found to increase railroad revenue and thereby speed up activity of one of our greatest industrial employers and purchasers of supplies.

WHEN JUSTICE FAILS

The various Wickersham reports on the state of criminal justice in the United States must have startled many of our readers.

Police brutality, political-criminal alliances, obsolete methods of handling criminals, corrupt lower courts—such elements as these stand in the way of fair application of justice. We have built up a gigantic legal machinery, based on thousands of laws and gound with red tape, and it has failed.

If we are to have respect for law, we must clean house. We must separate politics and crime. We must completely overhaul our law books, retaining fundamental laws, and throwing out the unenforcible and fanatical. We must go back to the old idea of law-making which protected both the rights of society and individual liberties.

We cannot make the nation law-abiding by passing more laws. We must give the crime problem the logical attention it deserves or surrender to the lawless element which thrives on liberty-restricting legislation.

SEVEN-CENT GAS TAX!

Florida now has the distinction of enjoying the highest gas tax in the United States—seven cents a gallon.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce has just published figures to show that motor vehicle taxation has reached a point where it has become such a burden to many people that it is causing curtailment in use of automobiles. The 1930 peak of automobile and gas taxes represented so great a cost that at least 134,000 owners failed to register their cars. Registrations fell off in 20 states, notably among those with the highest automobile tax.

Florida, with an average tax of $53.74 per vehicle, lost 18,000 registrations. Oregon, with a peak average tax of $62.73, showed a decrease of 17,000. Declines in registration ranging from 14,000 to 5,000 vehicles were reported by Kentucky, Georgia, Arkansas, Virginia, South Carolina, Louisiana and North Carolina.

According to the taxation committee of the American Automobile Association, the 26,628,779 automobiles in the United States, valued at $5,460,716,620, paid taxes of $1,000,388,270 in 1930, which tax was nearly 18.3 per cent of the valuation of the cars. "A tax of nearly 20 per cent on any form of property is almost prohibitive," said the committee.

ROADS FOR FARM RELIEF

Since 1915 the number of automobiles in use in this country has increased at the rate of 1,000,000 a year. It is estimated that 28,000,000 cars are now in operation.

Vast sums have been spent for road building, with the result that fast, well paved highways carry us from city to city, from state to state. The average city dweller thinks that the United States is adequately provided with good roads.

As a matter of fact, however, only an infinitesimal fraction of roads in the farm areas have been extensively improved. Five million farmers, according to an authoritative survey, are cut off from their markets during a part of each year by impassable roads.

Good roads that reach the farmer in contact with his markets at all times and allow him to transport goods quickly and economically, are an essential factor giving agriculture a sound economic foundation.

One of our morose bachelor friends says he doesn't see how a married man expects to have any vacation when he takes his wife along.

Last June living costs were 8.5 per cent lower than in December, and 9.8 per cent below June of the previous year. Food prices dropped nearly 14 per cent in the half year that ended in June.

From the peak prices in June 1920 to June 1931 the cost of living went down 30.6 per cent. Thus, if the wage earner today is earning the same salary he received in 1920, his income is almost one-third greater.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Word from official quarters at Washington is to the effect that the national administration, through relief agencies set up by President Hoover, will, within one month, have an accurate line on the unemployment situation and will have the machinery ready to prevent undue suffering through unemployment during the coming winter. The administration is proceeding on the theory that it will have to be ready to meet conditions in which there is no improvement. This is a wise precedure. Precautions should be taken to meet the worst situation that can reasonably be expected to develop. Then if the picture brightens this fall, all the better.

Newspapers over the country are already beginning to talk about "the shadow of the dole" which has been cast upon the country. It is to be expected that all sorts of bills, providing for the dole in various disguised forms, will be brought forward at the next session of congress in an effort to shift the responsibility of caring for the unfortunate, from the local communities to the federal government. It is this dole danger which the national administration is determined to check if it is at all possible.

And surely there is abundant precedent for making this determination. The experiences of Germany, and Great Britain with the dole ought to be enough proof for anyone, as to what might happen if the institution were fastened on the United States. The financial and economic situation in Germany needs no explanation. Everyone who has read the newspapers during the past few months is familiar with it. And the situation in Great Britain is none too satisfactory. According to latest accounts from London there is a deficit in the British budget of $600,000,000. Desperate efforts are to be made to balance the budget and it is significant that one means resulted on to do this is a reduction of the dole. Just whether this can be reduced now, after so many years, without serious trouble, remains to be seen. Certain it is that the dole system has been a bitter experience for both Germany and Great Britain.

Just what might happen in the United States, if the federal dole were ever fastened upon us, may be gathered from the recent experiences of the city of Detroit with its dole. There have been charges of graft, misuse of funds, the paying of the dole to those not legally entitled to it, including some who did not live in Detroit, and certainly the finances of the city have been disrupted by its experiences with the municipal dole. Putting such a system into effect on a national scale would increase the opportunities for graft, political wire pulling and so on.

It is not to be expected of course, that there will be fastened the dole system in the United States, will start with proposals for an out and out dole. They are far too clever for that, and will first of course propose innocent looking measures involving the federal treasury in the unemployment situation. But the trouble is, that once the door of the federal treasury is open, there will be no way of closing it, in this land of political opportunism. In Great Britain and Germany the dole system started harmlessly enough with various kinds of government unemployment insurance. But year after year the demands on the federal treasury continued and in both countries have the out and out dole and although facing dire economic troubles, have no way of lessening the dole burden.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger recently emphasized the danger in the United States, in commenting on a statement made by Senator Hebert of Rhode Island.

"Senator Hebert, of Rhode Island, who has been studying the subject of unemployment insurance abroad, prepartory to hearings before a special senate committee, sees the fearsome shadow of the dole should the system be imported to this country. That is, of course, the danger, as England's experience has shown. There was no thought of the dole when unemployment insurance was first established in England. Mr. Hebert found that in addition to other evils the system had developed a race of beggars. This is a point which hitherto has not been emphasized."

The way to avoid the danger is not to take the first step toward the dole system.

CHAIN, GROUP AND BRANCH BANKING

Bankers' Commission Describes Differences Among Various Kinds of Multi-Office Banks.

THE Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association has made the following statement on various types of banking systems operating through more than one office:

"We find that there are recognized in the banking world three types of multiple banking organizations, namely, chain bank systems, group bank systems and branch bank systems. They are alike solely in respect to the fact that each embraces under some form of common control or influence two or more banking places, but here the similarity stops and there are essential differences in organization and administration, especially as between branch banking and the chain and group forms.

"Chain banking is recognized as probably the least definite form of multiple banking organization. Generally speaking, this term refers to banks which have a definite connection by chartered banks owned or controlled through stock holdings by one or more common individuals, sometimes without public knowledge of the common ownership. Frequently the controlled banks are not administered as a coherent group under the guidance of a central, publicly known bank, but rather each bank is run as a separate unit bank in accord with the wishes of the dominant interest. In some cases, however, there is a central, publicly known control with a head office and executive officers over the operations of all the banks controlled, and this is perhaps the more desirable arrangement. It lacks however, the definite responsibility of that a corporate head organization would have. Each bank in a chain system operates under its own capital and there is ordinarily no binding relation among members of the string.

Group Responsibility

"Group banking, on the other hand, is a system in which all the controlled banks are separately chartered and operate as individual units with their own capital, control is exercised through a publicly known corporate organization under the direction of a responsible head office. It openly holds stock control of the member banks and is morally and legally responsible as the chief stockholder for their administration and the stability and liquidity of their liabilities. An essential feature is the fact that an organization of this kind is publicity known, which creates a large degree of responsiveness to public opinion. This is a distinct advantage over the chain form of banking.

"Branch banking is completely distinct from the two foregoing forms of multiple organization in that it does not consist of a string, chain or group of independent banks, but there is only one chartered bank in a branch organization and the extensions from it are all in the form of offices without separate capital or corporate existance. For everything that is done through these offices the bank itself is just as responsible legally and in every other sense of the word as though it were done over its own counters in its head office."

RECALLING SOLOMON AND SHEBA'S QUEEN

If the queen of Sheba could behold the million-dollar exhibit of gold which were placed, October 21, upon the heads of her reputed descendant, ex-Abyssinia, and witness the accompanying splendor of the homage paid to her country that has now been admitted to a seat among independent nations, she might be expected to exclaim, as she did in the presence of Solomon's glory, that the half had not been told her. But when it is remembered that one of her gifts to Solomon amounted to approximately $4,000,000, in addition to gems of great abundance and price, one senses the events of gold and the Kidney Wilhelm epoch and the gifts which the duke of Gloucester bore from the only other conqueror in the West worth mere monies to her, however lavish in the eyes of a modern democracy.

Though Christianity was not adopted by the Ethiopian royalty, the first dweller in the part of the world to be baptized as a Christian was the treasurer of Queen Candace, whose Philip saw sitting and reading in his chariot on the road to Gaza. So the emperor who kept vigil in veneration and prayer at St. George's cathedral at Addis Ababa should have recalled in his litany of thanksgiving not only the queen of Sheba but also the nameless man who "had great authority" under Queen Candace who went to Jerusalem for to worship" and "returned by the way unto Ethiopia went down in his chariot with Philip and was baptized.—New York Times.

From River to City.

The journey from the river to the city may be made in ten minutes or seven days. Frequently steamers prefer to be landed on the south side of the river where they get a glimpse of the most modern portion of Canton—the foreign settlement. Its small hill are dotted with substantial western churches, hospitals and handsome residences which constitute a community almost independent of the Chinese city, while below is a business district with streets lined with foreign and native-owned stores where modern and ancient merchandise is on display. Commodious docks, with sweeps of grassy lawns dotted with flowering gardens, a tiree-hole, tennis courts and pleasure craft on the Min lend to keep the smart foreign population contented.

The visitor should not leave the Foochow corner, even if he must, for to do so would be to miss one of the beauties and fabled mysteries that surrounds each step of the journey from the ocean to the port. Here the Min on one may see petit divers, floated a river he drowned his fellow slaves, that they might continue their service as a sacrifice to the sea-turtle, Chinese superstition concerns.

Here the Min on one may see petit divers, floated a river he drowned his fellow slaves, that they might continue their service as a sacrifice to the sea-turtle, Chinese superstition concerns.

Near Pagoda Anchorage rises many-tiered pagoda, capped by a tower built by a wife in memory of her husband and Hsieh Arden who, when he saw it, thought he had mistaken the river, and sailed away again, never to return, a mandarin's footprint in a rock commemorates the summary punishment of quarrymen who dealt right on chopping away its companion footprint, despite the flow of blood that spurted out at each stroke. When removed for a place in a temple it registered a protest by kicking its bearers into the river, so the comparable was not molested.

Inside the Foochow wall a few modern schools and government buildings have punctuated an otherwise low, flat sky line of rather dingy buildings. Telegraph keys click in telegraph offices, electric lights are available to those who can afford them, a few automobiles may be seen on the newer streets, and western fashions vie with those of the natives.

But if the traveler steps into a Foochow side street, he steps into an ever-present centuries past. Streets that twist and turn and curve in strange ways were marked features of Foochow's many city passages. For strangers, the tortuous route of one—we might be visualized by drawing a diagram. It begins by running eastward and then northward, eastward, northward, eastward, northward, eastward, southward, eastward, southward, southeastward, southward, westward, southward, southeastward, southward, westward, southward, eastward, eastward and southward.

The whole course of this thoroughfare is equal to but a few American city blocks in length and structure is it wide enough for even a pedestrian to pass without obeying gallant chivalry and their progress—dirty dogs and pigs—into becoming doorways of the shops that line the street. Nor does one have to propagate the Foochow pavements where the tidal movements of the Min bring in the water and leave it to evaporate, for all of the accumulated rubbish of centuries has been left to form the present level.

Travelers Use Sedan Chairs.

Ancient as Foochow seems to be to the westerner, it is a spot of wild west activity when compared to Foochow and Peiping. In the days of centuries ago the feudal lords from the region that now is Fukien province as the hinterland of Foochow. The way that conveyances of the city did not rise until the Manchurian which covered the years that America was discovered and colonized.

While some transportation facilities for reaching Foochow have contributed an important factor in keeping the city truly celestial, modern, and the industry progress have also caused considerable to give it a wide berth.

Perhaps the picturesque process of a Foochow tour is a visit to the tea factories and warehouses where consignments are sorted from the tea gardens of the hinterland, and where consignments are stored from stores in many to Chinese women and children, and "our Foochow" export of more than forty-six factories in the city.

Warned on Opium.

The proposition of "Foochow Fire Alarm" bothering its enthusiasts suburbs, is from Detroit. Name to the fifth a large factories know the property which made the city authorities in the days when there were only by no means seems done they can send the shops in the city.

Conspicuous proof that Foochow is progressive of reform, when once convinced was its complete against opium, consistent with position held valuable ore mines. Because of a local ordinance strict in the western days of our own country. The opium evil was a constant fear in having a license and permit system which not only limited the quantity in handling the dens in 1907.

The open shops along the Foochow streets reveal thousands of merchandising and an assortment in various industries. Before one's eyes are piled mats, wooden pillows and images of gods and mud-making tools; paper makers turn out fancy furniture; goldsmiths change and fine handsome ornaments; a modern fashion from generation to all shapes, sizes and colors; bottle makers and weavers of silken embroidery, or weaving the cloth which usually worn by gamblers by dozen, with only a small, unusually rare old gentleman gets now of a different color.

The tip of the small township of Dashanlang displays to the making of bamboo ware, which, and rice, are also entire articles of the bigger shops. Foochow imports the use of the ax, united carefully free and uses it in a forgery of exceptional finesse, this article for fine gentlemen, sold a modest premium which ousts Foochow lacquerware for honest.

Trade with 27 cities and many small villages about Foochow which are reached by river boats accounts for much of Foochow's commercial activity. It was not until 1861 when the Min was opened to foreign shipping that the city's "industries" and trade among the Min banks and Foochow merchants beginning to enrich trade. Since then Foochow's annual export of its stock ever reached nearly ten, $80,000 pounds and it bids fair to repeat.

The Dog Worshipers.

On a mountain not far from the city one encounters the dog worshippers—easily distinguishable by the peculiar cultures of their women—a muffled, thin effect with a cord dangling before the face. This is worn because of a myth which tells that a dog once saved the city and the gods rewarded him by unlocking him to a process by which he was to become human after his incarceration for seven times forty days. An inquisitive prefect's daughter lifted the cover when all but his head had been transformed and thus left a dog-headed man. In going to bring his bride to her, was created so his canine features might not offend her. So, to this day, the women of the mountain wear the muffling to preserve their husband's dog, and their worship the image of a dog.

Near the city is Pagoda hill, which derives this one of its many names from the residence there of a certain learned man who accumulated a library of a thousand shelf—known as the "Doctrine of the Universe." On this same hill are "six times six" wonderful things, including the inevitable rock showing the footprint of Buddha.

FOOCHOW COMING BACK

Crowded Shipping on the Min River at Foochow

(Released by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

Foochow, which, since ranked among the ten ports of the world and then, two decades ago, bowed to the Japanese, is rising to its comeback.

The easy slopes of Fukien province, of which Foochow is capital and leading city, seem are covered with thriving tea bushes; big-footed men, women and children throng the plantations, picking the leaves from dawn to dusk; tea-laden porters form an almost endless parade from the plantation to the tea warehouses and boats on the Min piled with packages of tea round the clock when Yankee clipper ships cleared Foochow with cargoes of the product for the American tempera.

Foochow port is really not in the city's suburbs. The docking part is in the city's fire-ship, stranded wall is more than three miles from the north bank of the Min, about 34 miles from the sea.

Low tiderods only low—low to reach the port; one must go by boat, for railroads and good roads are not to be found in this region. Oceangoing vessels from Shanghai and Hong Kong make regular trips up the Min which penetrates the Chinese coast opposite the north end of Taiwan (Formosa). The voyage may start on the river or as far as Pagoda Anchorage. There passengers are transferred to launches which, after nine miles of dodging sailing-covered sampans and gaudily-painted, high-powered junks, deposit their charges at the city's commercial center. If one wants to go further downriver, he may board a native boat with his own servants, family, food, pots and travel in the unrestrained atmosphere of the Min.

From Pagoda Anchorage is sailboat, formed when accumulation barges were added to present a French food from reaching the city during the French-China trouble in 1884. It is the characteristic of this Chinese love, for things as they are that Foochow tourists may have waited so long to take steps to clear the channel and thus avoid the endless annoyance of refloating of cargoes.

POULTRY

POULTRY FEED THAT IS WELL BALANCED

Calculated to Maintain Egg Production.

Feed cost is only a part of the expense of producing eggs. It is about 60 per cent of the total expense. If it takes 9 cents feed cost to produce eggs, the eggs must sell for 15 cents a dozen, to keep from losing money.

What the poultry man needs is a cheap but well-balanced ration.

There are two cash mixtures that can be prepared for about the same price. The first is: Equal parts of bran, shorts, cornmeal, ground oats, and meat scraps. The second has: 200 pounds cornmeal; 100 pounds ground oats; 100 pounds ground mix or barley, and 25 pounds of meat scraps. Either mash must be fed dry and kept before the hens at all times in open self-feeders. The feet of feeder space is needed for each 100 hens in the mixture.

If the hens refuse to eat with the mash, moisten a ration once cornmeal of and ground grains on the fact. It should contain some rather corn. If it does not eat the mash in the noon by including it. Usual parts of cracked corn, wheat and buffs in a well-pound ration, or 75 parts of corn, 25 parts of wheat, or in fact most any combination of grains.

Range and Fresh Water Necessary for Pullets

Crowding pullets on the range is one cause of poor development. When the young birds have the freedom of their acres to feather better and develop vigorous, more healthy bodies. Results are determined not entirely by the number of pullets but by the good or bad health of individual birds.

Never allow the water supply to run low on the pullet range. If water must be carried to the birds, take them to the water whether they need it or not. This prevents the fowls from drinking dirty and causing the birds to crowd each other while suffering from thirst. The modern method of feeding the growing mash consists in keeping a balanced dry mash available at all times and that mash should exactly be same or changed without large quantities of change to give with it.

Air Poultry House.

When a new poultry house consists of eight sections, while the hens all range in one flock, we find it pays to open all the inside doors and shut them open. This tends to stir up a breeze in the house and the air keeps moving even on hot days. An east and west, deep fronted with hard ware cloth can be shut instead of the wooden shut on hot nights, and it will help to keep out thieves but permit air to circulate through the house.—Indiana Farmers Guide.

Quarters for Pullets

As the rules are removed the flock will, of course, need less room and where a large house with pens is used the remainder of the floor can be moved into fewer and fewer pens and the empty ones thoroughly cleaned and disinfected and made ready for the pullets, a writer in the Ohio Farmer comments. This method of management will spread the labor over a long time and keep the scratching that fall when the pullets are ready to be put in their winter quarters.

To Control Worms

The California experiment station reports a study recently for the control of worms, consisting of two lessons of tobacco dust mixed with the pounds of ordinary dry mash feed. They say that it should be fed once daily for three weeks, then it should be discontinued for three weeks, before which it should be used for a second period of three weeks. After the first week of feeding and again after each period of feeding it epsom salts should be administered.

No Profit in Keeping Weak Pullets in Flock

Weak pullets should be disposed of as soon as possible after they are sold of the immature, according to Leon Field, of the Purdue university faculty.

"Poorly feathered chicks, often called 'runt birds,' usually are the result of an inherited weakness and some good hatchery men will not sell the 'fuzz chicks' hatched early in the season as 'fuzz chicks' for sale. None of the hatched birds was used as breeders and after being fed to the limit was marketed as 'new hens.'

"Many pullets are stunted by an attempt to prevent disease," he warned. "Treat the immune house in cheap or pullets, some a corn field, and move it a few yards every three or four weeks and be sure there is plenty of water for the birds."

Must Include Vitamins in the Chicken Ration

Better chicks result if the fattening rats are fed on vitamins A, D and E. Yellow corn and green alfalfa leaves contain vitamin A. Vitamin D can be supplied if the flock can range in places of sunshine. Whole kernels of yellow corn, tomatoes or fresh pasture ingredients. Vitamin E can be supplied in the form of a little wheat germ or cod liver oil until our friends sometime returns, as such oil contains vitamin D. Cod liver oil may be mixed with the grain feed at the rate of one pint for each 100 pounds.

Air Poultry House.

When a new poultry house consists of eight sections, while the hens all range in one flock, we find it pays to open all the inside doors and shut them open. This tends to stir up a breeze in the house and the air keeps moving even on hot days. An east and west, deep fronted with hard ware cloth can be shut instead of the wooden shut on hot nights, and it will help to keep out thieves but permit air to circulate through the house.—Indiana Farmers Guide.

Quarters for Pullets

As the rules are removed the flock will, of course, need less room and where a large house with pens is used the remainder of the floor can be moved into fewer and fewer pens and the empty ones thoroughly cleaned and disinfected and made ready for the pullets, a writer in the Ohio Farmer comments. This method of management will spread the labor over a long time and keep the scratching that fall when the pullets are ready to be put in their winter quarters.

To Control Worms

The California experiment station reports a study recently for the control of worms, consisting of two lessons of tobacco dust mixed with the pounds of ordinary dry mash feed. They say that it should be fed once daily for three weeks, then it should be discontinued for three weeks, before which it should be used for a second period of three weeks. After the first week of feeding and again after each period of feeding it epsom salts should be administered.

HEART OF JACKSON SHOWN IN LETTERS

Reveal Intimate Feelings of Great President.

In the fifth volume of the "Correspondence of Andrew Jackson," published by the Carnegie Institution of Washington, it is remarked by Dorror Jameson, in the preface that it is the family letters—chiefly the "products of the President's amiable pen"—that represent the actual "quality, furnishings and functioning of his mind." The literary gifts and powers of expression of his correspondence in matters of state, did not touch those letters, some 60 or 70 in number. No secretary revised their spelling and punctuation. They are as he wrote them with his own hand, and give us "attractive and affecting glimpses" of the weary, harassed President, of his doubtful health, and lonely, "seeking consolation in the love of a family who seem to had endeared himself by every evidence of esteem, consideration, gentleness and warm affection."

The volume begins with a letter dated January 2, 1809, to "My dear Sarah," the wife of his adopted son, which finds here "in advance" for everybody had gone to town by Mr. Benton replying to Mr. Clay in the senate and Colonel Bibb to the Mr. Ruffle in the house. He sends a "dozen pies" as a New Year's gift and, having nothing better that could be conveyed by mail, with a kiss for his "dear little Rachel" and for her grandslaughter, whom we suppose to be the little Sarah Yorke, and for all his comrade for the rest with his "affectionate husband Andrew Jackson."—New York Times.

More Uses for Cotton

Efforts to find new uses for cotton are being made in many parts of the southern favorite have found results in plans for developing bollvine into textile fabrics, suede from cotton waiting paper, wood substitutes, wire insulators and artificial duplicate made from the entire cotton plant, except the roots. Revival of cotton in its textile form of utilization and fabrication has resulted recently through new markets in the form of upholstery fittings, automobile cords, and the like.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

FATE'S ODD MIXING OF TWO MESSAGES

The well-known Detroit Free Press sends me the following interesting information:

"The late Lawrence Greene, a well known theatrical manager of the early '70s, was the manager of the theater in Washington in 1865 when Abraham Lincoln was shot.

"He told me the following curious story in connection with that event:

"It was the custom of the Presidents to send word to Mr. Greene as to when it would be convenient for him and his family to attend a performance in Ford's theater.

"One day previous to the memorable tragedy, he drove down Pennsylvania avenue and stopped in front of the theater. He threw off a margin from the newspaper in his pocket and wrote on it that he and his family would be happy to attend the next evening. The play was 'Our American Cousin.'

"About this time Mr. Greene was beginning with J. Wilkes Booth to a combination of his confrere as an actor in the Ford theater company. Booth drove Mr. Greene a note on a sheet of paper bound in a red envelope, asking to would grown his renewal.

"Mr. Greene found Booth's script in his pocketbook and he also put there Mr. Booth's letter.

"Many years afterward Mr. Greene at last met in leading Lincoln assassination and found to get letters and pictures for a book he was writing, he came across Mr. Booth's old letter, pasted, inside the fold of the letter was the stub of newspaper Lincoln had used to write on."—William Lyon Phelps in Scribner's Magazine.

While the population of the United States is almost evenly divided between urban and country the church membership is heavily rural. In cities about 30,000 children attend Sunday school in the country about 400,000.

Rural Hygiene

League of Nations experts have completed a project for recommendations for the betterment of rural hygiene of many countries. Leaguers are considering this statement in the present world-wide economic crisis in the necessity of keeping the rural workers up to the level of their urban brothers. The project provides amongst other things that provision be made for water supply, for sanitary housing and technical staff, with special attention to anti-malaria measures. It is suggested that the rural population be made fully aware of the importance of hygiene, and that the necessary steps be taken to secure the co-operation of the inhabitants.

Skeleton in Yale's "Closet"

Mark Twain's daughter, Clara Clemmel Gabrilowitsch, discovered and sang those "Negro-ish" songs in the days when Stephen C. Foster was the only composer of a music universally recognized as American. And what a shock it must have given the dignified gentlemen of the faculty to find that Mr. Twain, famous as a humorist, had written some of the most beautiful songs and waltzes music that we have.

DON'T be Misled Demand the FACTS

KNOW the manufacturer—his reputation and ability. Know if he has the advantages in buying, manufacturing, and distributing necessary to build better tires and sell them at lowest prices. Know if he puts his own name on every tire he makes and stands back of it with his guarantee and responsibility for service. These are important things to look for behind the price tag.

Don't be misled by the claims of mail order houses whose special brand tires are made by some unknown manufacturer as part of a miscellaneous assortment of production and sold to you without the manufacturer's name or guarantee. Buy on facts.

Drive in to the Firestone Service Dealer in your community and see cross-sections cut from Firestone Tires and special brand mail order tires. Make your own comparisons. See for yourself the Extra Values Firestone build into their tires and give you at no extra cost.

SHOWING APPRECIATION

Showing appreciation is an art. To be shown, it must be felt.

Few things are harder to teach than real appreciation.

We are in debt to others every day of our lives, yet how often do we speak of it. It is wonderful how the little spoken word of appreciation helps.

This bank will show its appreciation of your account by the service it gives you.

The remains of Mrs. Mary Smith who passed away on August 30th at the home of her brother, in Cheboygan, Michigan, arrived here Tuesday of this week and burial took place beside that of her husband at Holy Cross Cemetery. Rev. Father Nonbelieve officiated.

Mrs. Smith was born sometime in May, 1858, here, recently she was approaching her 94th year.

She lived in 1861 she was united in marriage to Joseph Smith and that fall found herself and husband located on Beaver Island, where she continued to reside until fifteen years ago.

She was a very amiable person, and believed by all who knew her. Her memory was very acute, even only a few days before she died.

In those days we received our mail from Mackinaw, a distance of from forty-five to fifty miles north and east of us. Her death brings to our memory an experience her husband and son-in-law, Paul LeBlanc, had on an ice floe, while en route from Mackinaw to the Island one winter.

When they had traversed about two miles of the distance the ice they were traveling on suddenly broke away from the main body carrying them out into the lake. For almost a week they were marooned on that ice, fine without food or shelter. They were finally taken off by the Indians of Garden Island, and died, who had a team of strong dogs and made last year when our air mail service started she commented upon the changes that have taken place on the different methods for transporting the time her husband carried the mail, sometimes alone, over the ice, the mail to and from the Island since 1776 or sixty years ago.

There from out of town to attend the funeral were Mrs. Mary Cosky of Cheboygan, Mr. and Mrs. George LaBlanco and Emerald, and Mrs. Wm. Gibson of Charlevoix.

SOME DEPRESSIONS WORSE THAN THIS

By RIME C. STEPHENSON
President American Bankers Association

ONE of the most significant aspects of the present business period is that while we had a speculative panic and a big one here has been no appreciable effect on financial position such as disorganization of credit, and in other years when the credit and monetary machinery got broken down and we had panics accompanied by runs on banks and closed banks.

Some of these elements of a true financial panic has been present in this depression of the 1930s. At no time was the banking structure as a whole in danger, despite the unprecedented run of small bank failures due it has its strength. At no time was the banking system, as a whole, unable to extend support to the unsolvent and frozen assets—more numerous and numerous to all kinds of business and manufacturing. Actions would have been a false prophet, who could have foretold that our banking and credit structure would stand up so well under concentrated as has.

TRUST BANKING SPREADING FAST

Government Official Shows That This Type of Financial Service Is Enlarging Its Field

SPECTACULAR growth of trust service in the banking field is reflected in the national banking system, Aubrey B. Carter, in charge of Trust Department supervision in the office of Comptroller of the Currency, Washington, D. C., brings out in an article in the American Bankers Association Journal.

"At the close of the 1930 fiscal year there were 2,472 national banks with trust powers," he says. "Their banking resources aggregated $25,559,000,000, which represented 31 per cent of the number of banks and 49 per cent of the total banking resources of the 1,012 national banks. Trust departments had been established by 1,339 of these banks which were administering 75,000 individual trusts with trust assets totaling $1,173,540,000, and in addition were administering 11,5% corporate trusts also acting as transfer and outstanding note and bond trustee aggregating $11,982,000,000.

"These figures represent an increase during a four-year period of 440, or 22 per cent, in the number of national banks authorized to exercise trust powers, an increase of 726, or 46 per cent, in the number of banks actively administering trusts; an increase of 46.3% or 356 per cent, in the number of trusts being administered, an increase of $2,500,000,000, or 385 per cent, in the volume of individual trust assets under administration, and an increase of $9,240,000,000 or 375 per cent, in the volume of bond issues outstanding for which these institutions were active as trustee."

These facts, he concludes are "a striking testimonial of the growing public recognition of the desirability of the corporate fiduciary in the settlement of estates and the administration of trusts."

"No cure—no credit" was a slogan adopted by bankers of Toledo, South Carolina, last year. "The proposition was kept before our people by a display advertisement in the county paper several weeks prior to corn planting time. As a result we have more corn raised in the county this year than ever previously, regardless of its need of rain in many sections," said one of the bankers in reviewing the plan. Home gardens are another project advocated with live results.

Floyd L. Kinde and family formerly of this city but who have been some months past living at 209 Park Avenue, vacated the residence Monday and have moved to Cato, to which point their household effects were taken via the trucking route.

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Young of Boyne City were Charlevoix business visitors Tuesday.

OVER 3,000 ENJOY PICNIC

WHITING PARK IS SCENE OF PLEASANT OUTING

The Ninth Annual Charlevoix County Picnic has come and gone, but the enjoyment of the occasion will not long be forgotten. Nature ably assisted the winners of the day by proving to be the most wonderful weather for this occasion. Everyone just seemed to receive the spirit of the day, and as the result these picnickers was a more contented and happier crowd at Whiting Park.

All activities planned by the committee in charge were in full swing at 2:00. At this time William Pearson of Boyne Falls in his able manner started the program off. The next speaker was Elmer Murray, East Jordan, who gave an original poem on the East Jordan Cooperative Creamery. Pearl Higgs, Normal Training Agent B. L. Mellenamp submitted the various events for the afternoon and explained briefly the 4-H Club exhibits that were present.

A large crowd assembled around the running races that attracted dozens of boys and girls throughout the county. Included in the events were running races for the boys and girls of various ages, potato race, sack race, three-legged race, and others. The Tug O'War between the East Side and the West Side was a thriller. For at least three minutes neither side was able to move the other, and the rope hardly trembled, but at last in a great burst of energy the East Side were victorious.

Without a doubt the greatest feature of the occasion was the exhibit of the girls canning clubs throughout the county. Eight clubs consisting of between five and eleven girls each participated in the wonderful exhibit, which was the largest ever staged by the blindside of people. They just wondered how it was possible for time girls to have obtained the splendid results. The only answer is their tireless enthusiasm, and loyalty to this extension boys' and girls' club program, sponsored by extension work.

In the club exhibits the Ironton Club led by Miss Elva Clark easily received first place. Second place went to the Marion Center Club, with Miss Bessie Straw as leader, with third place going to Inter Lake, led by Miss Martha Reisel. Fourth place went to Barnard, under the direction of Miss Minnie Gornell. Other clubs in this competition were the Phelps Club, led by Mrs. Wilbur Bumpus, the Advance Club, led by Miss Bernice Noble; the Murray club, led by Mrs. Ethel Hall and Boyne Valley Club, led by Mrs. Harry Iserner.

Miss Martha Reisel of Boyne City won the County Championship after having the best collection of six quarts of fruits and vegetables, as well as having the best single jar in the entire exhibit. In the canned meats section first place was won by Georgina Beer, Boyne Falls; second place by Frances Withers, Charlevoix; third, by Christina Withers, also of Charlevoix; fourth, Mary Ann Kendel, Boyne City; and fifth, Hazel Mosley, Boyne Falls. In jellies and jams first place was won by Edna Cunningham, Charlevoix; second, Lucile Cunningham, Charlevoix; third, Christina DeMatio, East Jordan; fourth, Mary Johnston, Bay Shore; fifth, Dorothy Ferguson, Bay Shore; sixth, Geraldine Williams, Charlevoix.

Second only to the canning club exhibit was the exhibit of the girl calves by the members of the Charlevoix County Calf members. Eighteen very promising young heifers were enthusiastically received by the husbandmen. When the smoke of battle had rolled away the score was twelve to four, in favor of the east sides. Naturally after the parade the west side farmers stepped right up with the challenge for next year's picnic.

The third and largest of the pleasures was ably taken care of by East Jordan and Boyne City American Legion committees. The Bugle corps took the fancy of the pleasure-seeking public, and did a big business throughout the day.

All in all it was the most splendid occasion, and one that was entirely enjoyed by everyone present. Already the comment was "We surely don't want to miss the next County Picnic".

Yours very truly,

Co. Agr. Agent.

4-H CLUB TEAMS AT MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

This is the big week for the 4-H Club members who now, win trips to the Michigan State Fair Monday night and Tuesday morning are the departure of those three teams.

Miss Hazel Mosley and Miss Beth Simpson of Boyne Falls with their leader Mrs. Harry Downe will demonstrate at the State Fair on Wednesday. Clayton Smith and Adolph Erickland of Charlevoix with their leader Carleton Smith will give their dairy demonstration on Thursday, while Robert Fantier and Melvin Sommerville of Boyne City will give their handicraft demonstration on Friday.

We sincerely hope that success will come to these boys and girls who have carried out such a splendid club program, and that they may be successful in winning trips to the National Boys' and Girls' Club contest to be held in Chicago.

Watch for more pictures of the announcement next week.

Yours very truly,
B. C. Mellenamp,

STANLEY MOORE SHOT AND KILLED

ENCOUNTERS GANGSTER ON ROAD IN COLORADO

Stanley Moore, one of the counselors at Camp Charlevoix, during the season just closed, was, according to reports, shot and killed near Holyoke, Colorado, Monday, September 7th by John Markham, 22 year old, reputed Chicago gangster.

Young Moore was 21 years old, a resident of Lowell, Michigan, and a student at the Michigan College of Mining and Technology at Houghton.

Prior to entering Houghton he was taking a hitch-hiking trip west and evidently got a lift by the gangster who confessed the killing.

He left Charlevoix about two weeks ago. He was well liked by the boys at camp Charlevoix and generally popular with those who made his acquaintance in this region.

Identification of Moore's body was made through a necktie worn at the time by the deceased which was given him by Mr. Moore. He was a nephew of Mr. and Mrs. Earl Moore, a recent resident in DeForest and Clarence Wood of this city.

Mrs. C. B. Fisk, owner-manager of John Fisk lodge, a resort on the East shore of Intermediate Lake, Antrim County, accompanied by her sister, Mrs. A. I. Hass and neice and husband, Mrs. and Mrs. Raymond Levasseur of Kansas City, spent Wednesday in Charlevoix.

Attorney Paulson of East Jordan, was a business visitor in Charlevoix Tuesday.

DRAGON NAMED BEST ALL-TIME DANGER SYMBOL

For centuries the perfect symbol of menace, dragons today form the most simple and certain index for a sensitive, a society thriller as unsentimental.

Such an opinion was expressed by Lloyd Corrigan, director of "Daughter of the Dragon," a new Sax Rohmer story to reach the screen at the Palace Theater, Friday and Saturday, and on which Anna May Wong, Warner Oland and Sessue Hayakawa are featured.

"While the dragon long has been associated with oriental mysteries, it is interesting to note that practically every race has conquered the dragon as an embodiment of evil influence," Corrigan says.

"When no living creature seemed horrible enough for this characterization, the dragon was evolved even in the earliest of myths.

"The earliest appearance of the dragon, research shows, was in the ancient Babylonian myth of Tiamat, a great she-dragon, which was finally killed by Merodach.

"Greek mythology has Theseus, Perseus and Apollo killing dragons and thereby becoming heroes. Hyrons of other races who slew dragons were Beowulf, Thor and Siegfried.

"The dragon has even entered the Christian records as an embodiment of evil. St. John brings the dragon into his Apocalypse. St. George and St. Michael are dragon slayers in Christian tradition.

"But, it is in the oriental mind that the dragon reserved most important parts. For that reason, the dragon who chosen as the impressive message of impending danger from Fu Manchu, as portrayed by Oland, and his daughter, played by Miss Wong."

ENDEAVORING TO ASCERTAIN CURRENTS IN LAKE MICHIGAN

Traveling at the rate of almost 10 miles a day, a bottle travelled along the waters of Lake Michigan from Leelanau County. The bottle, carried along by the currents of the lake, travelled the 100 miles in 24 days, from June 18 to July 8.

The bottle was one of 285 released this summer in various parts of Lake Michigan from the steamer Fulmar, operated by the United States Bureau of Fisheries. Each of the bottles carried a note asking the finder to return the note together with information as to the date and place where the bottle was found, to the Bureau's office at Ann Arbor, Michigan.

All of the bottles were released from June 18 to August 12. To August 22, 88 bottles had been recovered, giving considerable information concerning currents of the lake.

The purpose of the investigation is to determine the various surface currents throughout the lake. The information will be of service not only to commercial fishermen along the lake, but to navigation as well.

The 200 mile journey of one bottle from St. Joseph to Leelanau County in the longest taken by any of the released bottles. One other bottle thrown into the water 52 miles from Chicago on the route to St. Joseph was found 24 days later seven miles south of Manistee.

LEGION TO SPONSOR ANOTHER "GOOD TIME"

"Let's go, gang", will be the slogan next Friday evening, when Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226, American Legion, holds another of its popular mixed dances at the pier house on East Garfield Avenue.

There will be nothing given away this time, but those who desire will have a chance to play cards in the room adjoining the dance floor. Brown's orchestra from Ironton, that was here last time, will play for the Friday night. Floyd Black and Ted Coblentz will call the square dances and good order will positively be maintained.

"All right—let's go, gang!"

Mr. and Mrs. Frank A. Kenyon, who spent the summer season at Robbins Park Hotel, near Harbor Springs, returned to Charlevoix Monday and will occupy their Michigan Avenue cottage as soon as the same is vacated by the present tenants, a few days hence.

Clarence Bentham, athletic coach at Durand, spent the week end with his wife and mother, Mrs. Eva Bentham, in this city.

LEGION MEET AT ROGERS CITY

INSTRUCT DELEGATE TO VOTE FOR REPEAL OF LIQUOR LAW

Posts of the 11th District American Legion of Michigan, and their auxiliaries held their regularly quarterly convention, Sunday, September 6, 1931, at Rogers City, Michigan Not all of the posts were represented at this meeting, however—Charlevoix having the largest representation from both post and auxiliary.

Following a parade luncheon in the spacious and well attended city park, the Legionnaires paraded, with the bugle and drum corps of Petoskey, Cheboygan and Charlevoix furnishing the music, to the high school building where meetings of the district were next transacted.

Several important matters connected with membership regulations and the coming national convention were discussed, but the most momentous step taken was the instruction of Gomesh Fleming, district representative to the national convention at Detroit, to urge the convention, in behalf of the 11th district, to go on record in favor of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. This was effected by the unanimous vote of the convention of the district.

The silver loft and pearl, awarded to the post showing the greatest increase in membership in the year, was formally presented by Chairman Gust—the previous winner—to Leslie T. Shapton Post No. 226 of Charlevoix, winners for this year, to whom it will ultimately belong if the post can keep its lead for three consecutive years.

CHICAGO CLUB CELEBRATION

CELEBRATION COMMEMORATING OPENING IN 1681

The Chicago Club of Charlevoix—that social summer center for so many social registerites—last Friday celebrated the semi-centennial anniversary of its opening. Fifty Years Not so long as astronomers or geologists measure time but an enviable period of existence for any social club—especially one located as far north. For many of its members it is the delightful home of happy childhood summer days.

One of the Founders of the Club was the late Merville E. Stone for many years general manager of the Associated Press. While nearly all of its members, past and present, were or are socially prominent—a few of whom are listed in the Social Register—it has been nationally eminent. Athel R. Stevenson, vice president under Grover Cleveland; Judson Harmon, Attorney General of the U. S. and Edwin F. Uhl of Grand Rapids, Mich., former Ambassador to Germany. Of a few families the Club has been host to four generations. The grandchildren of the Solomon A. Balchs are the fourth generation of the Edward G. Shanahan family; the daughter of Mrs. Poole (the former Miss Stuart) is the fourth generation of the Robert Stuarts, who were among the earliest members of the Club. The children of George H. Parsons of Philadelphia, are the fourth generation of the Edwin F. Uhls through Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Balch. The John F. Wilsons have been identified with the club since its inception—Dorothy late John F. Wilson was president for many years—being surpassed at his death by Mr. William Wilsons who was a member back in 1885.

Officers and Directors of the Club for the current year are as follows:

William R. McIlvaine, president; John B. Lord, vice president; John Wilson, secretary and treasurer; Miss F. A. Franklin, manager.

DIRECTORS—Wm. R. McIlvaine, Solomon A. Smith, Earl D. Balch, Cyrus H. Adams, John B. Lord, Frederick H. Bosch, Joseph H. King, John Stuart, John T. Wilson.

HOUSE COMMITTEE—John F. Wilson, Joseph H. King, Mrs. Eugene S. Talbot, Jr., Cyrus H. Adams, Frederick H. Scott.

Fifty years ago on July fourth a grand ball marked the opening of the Club. There were seventy-two present, a few are still alive to recall the happy event, but only one of those present were here last Friday—Mrs. E. D. Balch who as Miss Edwina F. "PERSONAL MAID" CHARACTER FITS SPARKLING NANCY

Nancy Carroll in the title role of the Palace theatre feature for Tuesday and Wednesday of next week "Personal Maid" has a part whose kinds itself readily to her sparkling personality. The picture, made from the bestseller novel by Grace Perkins, was directed by Morris Hoff with a well-known cast of stage and screen favorites supporting Miss Carroll.

"Personal Maid" portrays the experiences of a pretty maid in a home of wealth, and her adventures when she masquerades as "a lady" herself. Dissatisfied with her apartment, Nora Ryan decides to leave her East Side tenement home and shift for herself. She becomes an efficient personal maid, but finds the job calls for many old duties which only her own quickness and intelligence can help her discharge.

She is sent to stay the wayward college-boy son of the family to be good and falls in love with him. She also meets the attention of a wealthy business friend of the family and is disillusioned. Then she takes a fling at Comrade Fleming, district representative to the national convention at Detroit, to urge the convention, in behalf of the 11th district, to go on record in favor of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. This was effected by the unanimous vote of the convention of the district.

The day, spent in the gardens of the famous Jewett estate in Pasadena in which's part of the new Greene Arthur was present "The Millionaire," was photographed were pleasant time for the cast and crew making the picture.

The star and Mrs. Arbuc were guests in the house during the time and the James family were very favorably impressed during the filming of the scenes, and acted as visitors of the garden party shown in the picture.

The fact that the gardens were more elaborate and larger than even exaggerated estate note would have been, that the pool, pagoda, and statuary in the formal gardens were of real Italian marble, influenced the studio to send for the use of this garden for the picture.

Incidentally, the money paid by the studio as rent for the location was given to the Assistance League, devoted to charitably uses among the needy in the former employ of Mrs. Frank F. Romance in Realm of World Finance

Drama Is Woven Around the Pound and Franc.

London.—Romance still lives in the world of international finance, all things it may be dimmed by a few drab inquisitives.

The most recent drama was woven about the English pound and the French franc, with the stronger sterling as the poor, long suffering orphan. Its sensational ending dazzled for the present at least, all banks of France to make Paris the greatest money market in Europe.

The curtain rises with the Credit-Anstalt, once the most powerful financial entity in central Europe, firmly supporting millions in funds and being used liberally to support Austrian industry and manufacturers in alluring strains, when the economic dragon was descended.

In a moment of desperation, Austrian leaders turned to their old ally, Germany, which had little money to offer, but suggested a reciprocal customs scheme whereby industry of both nations would benefit. Italy interpreted the pressure upon the Credit-Anstalt as a step toward Austro-German customs union, which precipitated such heated discussion that Europe has an instinct since the armistice.

France feared a new menace between Vienna and Germany by the convention of the treaty of Versailles and offered financial pressure to the Austrian bank in return for abandon of the proposed scheme.

However, after the measure had been referred to the Hague court for final settlement, Berlin and Vienna began offering financial aid quietly. In order that Austria might not lose the support needed by the Credit-Anstalt, French financiers demanded Austria scrap the customs union.

Austria's resistance, observers pointed out, would have made her simply another franc client of Paris and embroiled her in opposition as a money market. At the crucial moment, however, the Bank for International Settlements, known in financial circles as the "Jews' sweat upon the stage with its names huge filled with Rothschild, came to the rescue.

The Credit-Anstalt was saved. The bank of England's reputation had a new glitter and France was left with nothing but a daze as to how the rich prize had slipped from its grasp.

In addition, French bonds of Paris becoming a great dispatch center have of late been dampened by the spread of the general depression in France, to May found an unfavorable balance of visible trade estimated at $45,000,000, the largest it had known for six months in many years.

Girl's Garb Shocks Parson; Walks Out

Vienna.—A sensational scene occurred at the Church of the Capuchins in the town of the music in the Czechoslovak province so, Murau. The church was crowded for Sunday service, but many girls and married women had appeared in dresses having light necks and arms bare and in short stockings.

Fortunately Professor Seipel, who was to deliver the sermon, took offense at thirty dress and appearance, the usual reporter to inform the congregation that he was unable to preach in such proper garb. He then left the pulpit, leaving the congregation to take action.

An effort will be made to recover "senators" from the historic old Rancho Johnson in Texas and restore the structure.

German Count Learning Wheat Farming in U. S.

Lubbock, Tex.—Count Joachim von Bernstoff, Heidelberg graduate, is continuing his education in the wheat fields of Texas.

His classrooms are broad, acres of the Texas Panhandle farm of Hickman Price, probably the largest individual grower of wheat in the United States.

Von Bernstoff is learning first hand how to operate a big wheat ranch—and then he plans to return to Germany and take over his father's 10,000 acre farm.

He made his way to the United States aboard a tanker and is learning the ways of farming by actual doing. He has taken night shifts of oiling combines over a period of weeks. Other days he works with the laborers in the harvest fields.

"Wheat farming in Germany is conducted on a much smaller scale than here," he said. "A 50 acre farm is considered a large one."

His father's 10,000 acre farm is the largest privately owned tract of land in Germany, he said.

Motor Trucks to Speed Up Funerals in China

Peiping.—Motor trucks have been enlisted to give a new lease on life to ancient Chinese funeral processions.

In the hustle of modern existence, even here, Chinese had begun to feel they could not spare the two or three days sometimes necessary for old-style funeral processions to make their way from the city to distant country burial places.

Motor trucks have solved the difficulty. The procession, with its drag ons, paper men and urchins for one in the west world, and elaborate paper mentalls, starts out from the home, and after a brief march is loaded into trucks.

Sweet Clover Spreads

In the early days sweet clover was used mainly as a pasture or as a source of feeding fertility to land that had been depleted by long-continued cropping with corn and small grain, but at present it is well established as a regular crop on farms in many sections of the corn belt. Its outstanding value as a pasture and soil-improving crop, the relative cheapness of seed, and the ease with which it may be established are responsible for its rapid increase in acreage.

Big Cities Spend More Than Three Billion

New York Takes the Lead in List of 250.

Washington.—The 250 cities of the nation having a population of 30,000 or more spent $3,405,000,000 in the operation of their governments in 1929.

Their revenue totaled $3,075,274,000, and presents subject to ad valorem taxes totaled $27,000,000,000 and returned at $26,692,305,756, or $1,811 per capita.

These figures are given in a compilation made public by the Department of Commerce.

The revenue receipts totaled $697,-000,000 more than the payments of the year, exclusive of payments for permanent improvements or $300,000,000 less than the total payments, including those for permanent improvements.

In only 87 of the cities was there sufficient revenue to meet all payments during the year. The payments in excess of revenue receipts were met from the proceeds of debt obligations.

The gross debt outstanding at the close of the year amounted to $8,161,-073,276, or a per capita of $267.22, consisting of $7,886,740,779, funded or fixed; $276,447,218, special assessment bonds and certificates; $476,667,-197, revenue bonds, and $90,317,151, outstanding warrants.

The net indebtedness of the 250 cities amounted to $6,130,289,576, or $189.62 per capita.

The assessed property value thereof $18,262,062,485, recapus of $662,405,661 and $664,594,791, representing the cost of government, New York led with $9,000,000,000.

Following New York in the matter of governmental cost was Chicago, with a total of $172,795,000. The next eight cities, ranked according to their governmental cost, were Los Angeles, Detroit, Los Angeles, Boston, Buffalo and Baltimore.

New York was first also in its net debt, which amounted to $1,484,850,-000, an increase over that of 1928 of $68,434,000.

ABOUT THE HOUSE

Rust in ovens is due mostly to moisture that develops from baking or roasting. If the oven door is kept open for twenty minutes after use the moisture will evaporate and remove the cause of rust.

Dry, chewing gum often carried in doors on the soles of shoes, is easily removed from carpets and rugs by rubbing on a few drops of gasoline. The gum will crumble and can be blotted up.

Serving a sherbet with the meal course adds a novelty touch to the dinner. It is not only delicious in itself but gives a piquant contrasting flavor to heavier dishes. Another all-important point for the busy housewife is that sherbets are easily and quickly prepared.

A well-known scientific in the field of nutritional psychology recently suggested that an excellent way to stimulate digestion is to partake of a sweet smacking second dessert at dinner—a half hour or so after meal. A few pieces of candy, some small cakes, in fact, anything sweet, he said, is not only a pleasant afternoon dinner but helps stimulate the flow of gastric juices needed to complete digestion.

Better Care of Swine Results in More Pigs

The increase this year in the average number of pigs raised per litter throughout the United States is partly as a result of the more general application of the swine-sanitation system, in the opinion of R. J. Kinzell, in charge of swine investigations for the United States Department of Agriculture, who comments on the department's pig survey report for June. This year the average was 6.6 pigs per litter, an increase of 0.05 pig over last year and 0.07 pig over 1928. This is the first time in nine years that the average has shown an increase over litter.

"The increase made in the last two years cannot be credited to any one thing," Kinzell declared, "but it is probable that much of the chewing is due to better management of herds and especially to the prevention of worm infestation of young pigs through the use of the swine-sanitation system. The favorable weather conditions during the long farrowing season both this year and last have been a great help to prevent injuring pig losses everywhere."

Sweet Clover Spreads

In the early days sweet clover was used mainly as a pasture or as a source of feeding fertility to land that had been depleted by long-continued cropping with corn and small grain, but at present it is well established as a regular crop on farms in many sections of the corn belt. Its outstanding value as a pasture and soil-improving crop, the relative cheapness of seed, and the ease with which it may be established are responsible for its rapid increase in acreage.

Thin Fall and Winter Apples, Say Specialists

By thinning fall and winter apples, orchardists can improve the size, color, and quality of their fruit, according to specialists in horticulture at the Ohio State University. They declare that the practice does not reduce total yield but increases the amount of number one apples.

Culls which are removed now are definitely disposed of, while good fruits shall grade and reach the consumer. Because of this they believe that thinning should be handled when apples are wasting and let a growing cost.

Other advantages of thinning, declare the specialists, are that tree breakages reduced, tree vigor improved better control of the second brood codling moth can be secured, all fruit handling can be done in one and the apples ripen more uniformly and are ready for consumption from hand on matured trees.

It is best, they believe, to remove all blemished small, and misshapen apples and to leave only the best single apples in the clusters. In most varieties an eight-inch spacing is the most satisfactory.

Peat Moss Best Litter

Peat moss has been growing in favor rapidly as a litter for poultry, both in the brooder and the laying house in brooders it is good for from five to six weeks and it will last considerably longer in the laying houses. The comfort of the birds is greatly increased by its use. In preparing August breeds for the show room—peat moss as a floor covering prevents the soil and smash feathers from becoming soiled or broken. After being used for the poultry it is a good mulch

Cattle Owners See Value of T B Test

Doubters Convinced After Seeing Officials at Their Work.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.)

Cattle owners who doubt the value of the tuberculin test are invited to follow their reactors to slaughter and see the post-mortem inspection.

Recently L. G. Larson, of Tipton, Iowa, after seeing the slaughter of some of his fine beef cattle which had reacted to the tuberculin test, said: "I'll admit gentlemen, I had no faith in the test, but I want to tell the world that when one feels as I did about it, all he has to do is to follow his cattle to slaughter and he will realize that the government knows what it is doing." The story of Mr. Larson, his brother, I. S. Larson, their father, and a neighbor, following a bunch of reactors to the abandon at Cedar Rapids, was reported to the United States Department of Agriculture by one of its inspectors in the field.

The animals were slaughtered at an establishment where federal meat inspection is maintained. In conformity with federal regulations each animal was identically marked to retain the identity of the carcass and parts throughout the procedure of slaughter and post-mortem inspection, which was conducted by veterinarians trained in meat inspection. The carcass was subjected to a careful examination. It was condemned in its entirety and delivered for final disposition to the others the disease had not reached a stage to require the condemnation of more than some parts. One of the cows had an open tuberculous infection of the udder and distributed the germs in enormous numbers. The others were very dangerous carriers of the disease because of the extensive involvement of the lungs.

The seller of tested cattle swears by the tuberculin test and will not sell anything else. He says he has had no official procedure in testing cattle for tuberculosis and in disposing of reactors, department officials explain. The state, the federal government, and the cattle owners are willing to have a by cattle owner see what happens to his reactors when slaughtered. He may also examine the records kept at slaughtering establishments operating under federal meat inspection to find what disposition is made of his cattle reactors. In other states, as well as in Iowa, the officials stand behind the tuberculin test.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

From Stage Driver to Railroad President

THE Hon. Stanley Twitchell rose from obscurity to become one of the leading figures of the city of stage coach transportation, then president of the railroad that got his stage lines out of business, and then a member of congress.

Many a New England child, hearing the cry of "Gilney's coming! Gilney's coming!" and probably wondering what a "Gilney" was, watched with delight as a great stage coach with six prancing, rocking, lumbering horses came to a stop in front of the Haystate house, in Hartford, on the corner of Worcester, Mass., or Brattleboro, Vt.

Seated atop the magnificent vehicle was a dignified, self-contained man, ruddy of face, his stout body washed in a heavy greatcoat and on his head a tall silk hat, fastened under which would sit erect on the coachman's seat, guide the well fed horses and suddenly be off with a great rattle of wheels and blowing of horns.

Stanley Twitchell was called "Honest Stanley" even then. Probably it was because of his fair reputation for integrity, and probably also because he was a prominent politician and always had a finger in the political pie and the glowing hope of his part of New England.

His stage coach was one of the most famous that ever rolled over the rough roads of the early days of stage coaching. It was built in 1837 by Henry T. Hunt, of Worcester, and was the pride of the driver and occasionally getting a new coat of varnish and a fresh set of wheels. It remained in active service for many years. Twitchell defends her and loves her.

CHAPTER X

It was an illegible image and the whole tableau—country—was steeped and took a deep breath. Well it might. Just ahead of it, all unknown, waited events that were to change and alter as would make the past years seem unjustified in comparison. Ever since the day of the Run, more than fifteen years ago, it had been racing better than a thousand miles a minute, and yet the ride at night.

In the days when he was a post rider, before he had accumulated sufficient money for more, he was in a stage coach line, he owned two or three coaches, including hacksies underneath the Nevada House, in Worcester for a week, waiting for deserters from British steamers. He also had men and fresh horses waiting for the entire week along the road to Norwich, Conn.

When the boats arrived Twitchell would send out for them, and to Norwich, he met the boat, and delivered the despatches in New York with a rush and rapidity, indeed.

Gliney Twitchell was a great favorite with the passengers, and in the winter, when the roads were heavy with snow, he would ride outside with the driver, and in the summer, when the roads were dusty, he would ride inside with the passengers.

Sometimes he thought vaguely of going to Wichita or Kansas City or even Chicago to get some less Jewish girl there, but he never did. It never occurred his head to marry a Gentile.

Between him and Y—yaw there existed a deep sympathy and understanding. Yancey congregated for Sol Levy at the Indian reservation, and he was specially good to Sol because Sol was a Jew.

"Why, the very idea!" snorted the redoubtable Mrs. Tracy Wyatt, when her husband was the consuming candidate. "A Jew for mayor of Osage! You'll be having an Indian next president. Mr. Wyatt's folks are real Americans. They fought with Kansas. And as for me, why, I can trace my ancestry right back to Wm. Whipple, who was one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence."

Sol Levy never had a chance for public honors. He, in fact, did practically nothing to further his own position. He seemed to regard it that the wait, very time, very bored, very offending, and loaded.

"Ruby was just touching the one of the Mormon ceremony songs. Darned interesting. It's the last song. They sing it at sunrise when they're just about all in. Now the bride—"

To Sabra's horror he began an orgie of details, and the fascinating subject of the kitchen wall, its open half closed, its shelves and its stove, seemed to be his panacea. His manner, than his words, made Sabra follow him, albeit unwillingly into the kitchen. Suddenly she realized she hated his subject and knew why. He talked with a queer little sporting gait, on the very soles of his feet. It came over her that always he had annoyed her in this unreasonable way. She remembered that some one had thoroughly told her that Pete Pitchlyn, the old Indian scout, lounging on his favorite corner, had said about young Clint:

"Every time I see that young Clinton Carey I count a coon. Makes me want to shoot him. He walks like a coon, and he talks like a coon, and he's a coon."

Sabra built a white frame house in the style of the day, with turrets, low verandahs, and scroll work. There was a stained glass window in it was the most admirable, exciting and wicked thing in the world. She also had a fondness for gilt chairs, and she had them. It was the most exhilarating, exciting and miraculous circumstance that has ever happened to her. She felt like little Mirabel Monestines, musical comedy star, whose name was actually in sparkling arcs like in his apartment, and had on old rib blankets from Arizona, and a wife, Mrs. Tracy Wyatt, who would join the ladies' auxiliary and wear a frilled apron and whirled about for the benefit of the Indians.

She had hated about it! How now prevalent among the Indian tribes from Nebraska down to Mexico had become the habit of eating the little buttonlike top of a Mexican cactus plant. In shape a disk about an inch and a half in diameter and a quarter of an inch thick, the peyote or peyote gave the eater a strange feeling of lightness, dispelled pain and fatigue, caused visions of new worlds, heaven and grandeur. The use of it had become a Indian religious rite.

Like a fury Sabra advanced to the table, snatched up the little round button of soft green.

"Peyote!" she whirled on Cen. "What are you doing with this thing?"

Clark's eyes cast down artlessly. His hands in his pockets, he leaned against the wall, very tanned, very bored, very offending, and loaded.

MORE FAIRY TALES

Collier's Weekly editorially repeats that the rates in the Hawley-Smoot tariff law were put at such a high point that they were responsible for increases in tariff rates for retaliatory purposes by Canada.

It seems strange that a magazine with the gentlemanly reputation of Collier's would continue to repeat this assertion either in ignorance of the facts or with willingness to deceive its readers.

Figures compiled by the United States Tariff Commission in 1930 showed that Canada was collecting a larger percentage of the valuation of imports from the United States before our new tariff law was passed, than we would collect under the increased rate of our new law. The percentage of customs collections to valuation of imports was approximately the same under Canada's old law as the estimated percentage under our new law. The actual collections of our new law has shown a lower percentage than the tariff commission estimated. But since in Canada's average was included empire products which carry a 20 per cent preference, the actual percentage of collections to American import valuations was substantially higher when recent Canadian rate raises were made than they are under our new tariff law.

Consequently the talk about retaliation on account of an American tariff lower than the Canadian tariff grossly misrepresents the situation. Canada, with a tariff already higher than our own, raised her tariff rates for the purpose of protecting her own markets and putting her own people to work supplying Canada's own needs to lessen unemployment. Governed by realists, Canada would do that regardless of our tariff legislation, and so would the United States. But publications echoing the demands of the international bankers and industrialists who have put their eggs in the foreign trade basket, rather than of the manufacturers and workers whose stake is in the home market, continue to propagandize in favor of creating "prosperity" in America by increasing the volume of foreign products made cheap by cheapening the workor. In order to make their case stand up it is necessary for them to ignore or distort the facts as in the case of the relative tariffs of the United States and Canada.

Fully two million workers are jobless in this country in the oil, coal, lumber, glass and similar industries for one reason only, and that is that we have not given them tariff protection equal to the difference in labor costs at home and abroad. Because in Europe wages have remained stationary since before the World War, and wages in the United States increased more than one-half between 1914 and 1929, we have today a tariff less protective at the time of its passage than any we have enacted in the last half century. This is, of course, a theory contradictory to the ideas which organized and heavily financed ballyhoo has impressed on the American people, but it has this advantage—it is statistically true.

If Congress had promptly carried out the recommendation of President Hoover, that every industry suffering unemployment because of foreign competition based on cheap labor costs be given adequate protection, and a proper defense had been put up for this policy on the ground of broad principle, neither the country nor the party in power would now be worrying with a serious problem of unemployment. The country, however, has been deceived by such arguments as those presented editorially in Collier's, that for our six per cent of export trade we can afford to sacrifice our 94 per cent of domestic trade to a home market with a per capita consumption power four times that of Europe, and eight times that of the Orient, Africa or South America.

NO ENTANGLEMENTS

In an endorsement given recently by the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor to the proposal that the United States adhere to the World Court under the Root proviso, the statement of the executive council, in explaining the council's decision, says in part:

"So long as the interests of the United States are adequately safeguarded and so long as guarantees are given that there will be no interference in purely domestic questions, the American Federation of Labor believes that the United States should take its place with other nations in advancing the cause of world peace through the settlement of questions which require judicial examination and action."

This is exactly the point. The United States Senate in the Coolidge administration, in putting the United States into the World Court, adopted certain reservations which were calculated to protect the United States in its freedom of action so far as domestic issues are concerned. Evidently these reservations did not please some of the other nations adhering to the court as these nations refused to accept them. Then came the further effort near the close of President Coolidge's term, to get Uncle Sam into the court, and Mr. Root went to Europe to consult with some of the world statesmen there. The result was the so-called Root formula. Its sponsors claim that it is just as good as the reservations wisely accepted by the Senate and that the nations who rejected the Senate reservations will accept the Root formula. If the two amount to the same thing, it is a little difficult for the average layman to see why the Senate reservations were not accepted by European nations in the first place to save all the bother. The fact that the reservations were not acceptable but that Root formula will be, indicates that there is a dark complexioned gentleman concealed somewhere in the international woodpile.

Proponents of the Root formula always fall back on the old argument that if we don't like the Court we can withdraw. But anyone who is at all familiar with internationalist propaganda can easily imagine what a howl of protest would go up from the internationalists here and abroad if Uncle Sam ever decided to withdraw from the Court because he thought his domestic rights were being interfered with. He would be informed on all sides that "it wasn't cricket" and would be called everything from a quitter to an international desperado.

When the Senate takes up the World Court resolution again the question as safeguards will come to the forefront and it is a good bet that unless there will be several victorious senators who will want to know why the Senate reservations were rejected and the Root formula drawn up, if both amount to the same thing.

SCIENCE AND HONOR

According to Maxwell Hainey, Traffic Engineer of the National Bureau of Casualty and Surety Underwriters, science, by producing the modern high speed automobile and smooth highways, has contributed to the accident situation. Therefore, Mr. Hainey reasons, it is up to science to tender first aid in remedying the situation. Among his suggestions to reduce the casualty list, which this year may total 35,000 deaths and 1,000,000 injuries, are:

1. Improvement in street and highway design. The highway of the future must make it difficult for the motorist to have an accident.

2. State and local traffic ordinances must be coordinated so that there will be full cooperation and great responsibility.

3. Correct utilization of signs, markings, beacons, signals, etc., can do much to increase safety.

4. Motor laws must be enforced to the maximum possible degree.

5. The public must change its present attitude of indifference toward automobile accidents. If it looked upon the reckless driver as an outlaw, our streets and highways would immediately become safer.

These are sound suggestions that states and municipalities would do well to follow. It is their duty to do the material things necessary to reduce accidents, exactly as it is the duty of the individual driver to operate his car in a careful and prudent manner. Safer highways, better enforcement of modern laws and a new public attitude with which to fight the automobile accident menace.

CANCELLATION

We are hearing a great deal nowadays of (take) a holiday bank. They have backed many otherwise sound banks and are imposing heavy sacrifices on millions of Americans. Our international financiers have managed also to acquire frozen assets and they would like the American people to help thaw them out. By cancellation of the government debts, directly and indirectly, German and British and other European countries will be relieved of taxation to the extent that it is imposed for the service of government loans and to that extent the private banks in which our international financiers are primarily interested will be made good.

This may be necessary or at least beneficial in the long run to the American people, and again it may not. But the additional burden upon the American people should not be imposed as accepted unless and until the interests especially relieved have made every effort to meet their own responsibilities and have made their own responsibilities and have made their own sacrifices. In our domestic banking situation stockholders and depositors are paying heavily for the condition in which they find themselves. They are not shifting and cannot shift their burden on the shoulders of the public. It is not too much to require of those who have made unprofitable loans in international finance to make their own sacrifices and meet their own losses. If improvident loans have been made, as seems evident, in International finance, they should not be bolstered at public expense, unless there is a clear public interest in so doing.

Our international finance has not been unpunished since the war by much foresight or respect for the common welfare. It has made serious mistakes, but lesser folk have to pay for their mistakes, and so should the greater. Not least among the considerations we may wisely give to this problem is the benefit to the nation which will come from penalizing incompetent and greedy use of financial power and opportunity.—Chicago Tribune.

CARELESSNESS CAUSES ACCIDENTS

According to Edward J. O'Meara, Highway Commissioner of Wisconsin, the rate of increase of automobile accidents is greater among experienced drivers than among those of two or less years' driving experience.

This does not mean that we should not attempt to make sure new drivers are competent before licensing them to operate cars, but it does indicate that carelessness is the principal cause of the mounting toll of automobile deaths and injuries. The so-called "good" drivers are those who do the excessive speeding on stretches of narrow, twisting road, who pass on corners, weave in and out of traffic, and do the rest of the things that result in crashes.

Rigid enforcement of driving codes alone cannot overcome this because the patrolman is limited to the very small piece of road on which he can be at any given time. A sense of responsibility, of duty, must in some way be instilled in those who use the highways, to materially improve the accident record.

General safety education in schools is now producing tangible results in the form of fewer deaths in children of school age—and the knowledge implanted in malleable minds now, will be retained by the adult. Education, vividly and unremittingly pursued, is the greatest factor in lighting the accident menace.

A MORAL FOR "REFORMERS"

Those who advocate anti-revolver and pistol laws because of the prevalence of crime are on the wrong track entirely. The sawed-off shotgun and submachine gun are the modern weapons whose operation involves little skill and whose destructive power is a thousand times that of any small arm.

It is not improbable that crime flourishes today partly because so few homes and offices are protected by arms. A good many cities and states have rigid anti-gun ordinances, and in others the requirements for owning a weapon are so involved that the average citizen does not go through the necessary red tape. This is not an argument in favor of all of us going about the streets armed—but it certainly is evidence of a condition which gives potential law-abiding citizen to protect his home or place of business.

We have done many absurd things in the name of crime prevention. We have passed liberty-restricting laws, thus giving us more laws to break. We have penalized the good citizen in the home by making ordinary articles miraculously cut down crime. As a result, the United States is the greatest law-breaking civilized country on earth. There is a sound moral here, if the "reformers" care to look for it.

AGRICULTURE SEEKING THE WAY OUT

For some years agriculture has been seeking for a way out of its predicament. Now it begins to look as if it may have found it in the movement toward cooperation.

At present some 12,000 farmers' cooperative associations in this country transact an annual business of over $2,500,000,000, according to Vera McCrea of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, a leader in the dairy eastern field. Many of these have centralized their sales activity in large organizations doing an annual business of between $10,000,000 and $100,000,000. With 7,000,000 farmers in organization an appreciable percentage of the 6,500,000 American farms.

Agriculture is in pretty much the same situation as are many manufacturing industries. Exactly as industry has already found the problems through production efficiency and distribution, so must agriculture solve its problems. A ready market and profitable prices for goods can only be had when farmers unite to place themselves on a bargaining footing with dealers to whom they sell. The bigger the business, the better the bargaining power—and the fast growth of farm cooperatives indicates that agriculture is appreciating that fact and is developing accordingly.

COUNTY GAS TAX NEXT???

On October 6, voters of Montgomery, Alabama, will decide whether a county-wide gasoline tax of one cent a gallon shall be levied to raise revenue for public schools.

One wonders just what the county will gain if the voters favor the proposal. Alabama already has a five-cent state gas tax—and the additional cent will work a hardship on thousands of citizens. Local gasoline dealers will suffer, as all who are able will buy gas outside the county line before entering the city. Montgomery must have more money for schools—it should raise it in the regular manner—aid not by class taxation. Every citizen, whether he owns a car or not, equally benefits from educational facilities and should support them accordingly.

The public will eventually rebel against a sales tax of twenty or more per cent on a necessary commodity.

FLYING PASSENGERS

Perhaps it is because of the Post Office Department belief that it has gone the limit in paying high prices for air mail, that the Department is looking into the receipts of the operators from the growing passenger traffic. The probabilities are that the Government will pay less for air mail next year.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Great Britain is going through a financial crisis, second only in severity to the one encountered by Germany a few weeks ago. The Labor government has fallen and a coalition, Nationalist government has taken its place. Every American, of course, hopes and believes that England will weather the storm, and get back to something approaching normalcy, even though normalcy in England these days isn't what it used to be.

The Labor government split on the issue of economy and the dole. A budget deficit of something like $800,000,000 was disclosed. The extreme laborite wanted this made good by the imposition of more taxes. The conservatives declared that this would only further impede business recovery and that the deficit should be made good in a different way. They are said to have proposed that one-fourth of the deficit be made up by additional taxes and three-fourths by a reduction of expenditures, resulting in a cut in the dole. To this the laborites refused to agree. Premier MacDonald is said to have sought a compromise by which half of the deficit would be made up by increased taxes and half through a reduction in governmental salaries and the dole. The compromise was not agreed to and the government fell. The new cabinet is to be made up of conservatives, liberals and nation leaders, with Mr. MacDonald retaining the post of premier.

Each party and each faction of the labor party had a remedy for the deficit. But there is one point which ought to strike Americans as significant, and that is that in all of the programs proposed for balancing the budget there was no proposal for a reduction in the expenses of the navy or naval construction. To one unacquainted with the situation it would seem that the cutest way to pare expenditures in the big navy country of the world would be to pare the naval budget. But not even the more radical laborites, those left-wingers who shout nihilism for the other nations, at every opportunity, proposed a plan of balancing the budget, in part, by a reduction in the expense of the navy or in the naval building program.

Isn't there something a little significant in this? With the country already staggering under a load of taxation, seeking to cut salaries and the dole of the unemployed, there is no suggestion that the problem might be solved in part by naval limitation. It is to be hoped that some of the leaders participating in the United States will think this over carefully. They seek from time to time to put Uncle Sam in the wrong, to show that other nations are eager and anxious to disarm, and lead the way. Yet in France, the leading military power of the world, and in Great Britain the leading naval power of the world, there doesn't seem to be the slightest disposition to disarm further. Even a crisis in the British budget doesn't bring such a suggestion from the supposedly pacifist left wing of the labor party. They might advocate a tariff even, but no reduction in naval expenditures.

What's wrong with this picture either? Somebody evidently has been feeding us some particularly unintelligent and misleading pacifist propaganda. Won't some leading pro-Immortal pacifist now arise and explain the British situation to us? No such explanation will be forthcoming unless our professional pacifists can find some way to blame it all on Uncle Sam in which case, of course, "explanations" will be both frequent and voluminous.

Governor Meier of Oregon recently said that in his state out of $50,000,000 raised for taxes, less than $7,000,000 goes for state purposes while the remaining $43,000,000 represents local levies. We will not have proper taxes until anybody over there suggest that, have you?

The M. E. parsonage of this village is completed, and the pastor and family are the return of the pastor from conference. The residence is a commodious, modern building, with a seven cellar the whole size, well arranged inside and well finished in particular. The rooms have been papered by a handsome Iron fenie, and the residence and grounds are among the most desirable in the village. The house is 70 feet long by 40 feet wide, and the cellar wall is completed to a height of 7 feet. The cellar is to be divided into three rooms, and the walls are of stone. The house is to be heated by a furnace, and will be supplied with water from the village water works. The cost of the building, when completed, will be about $2,000.

Pertinent Paragraphs

Each year agriculture has been seeking for a way out of its predicament. Now it begins to look as if it may have found it in the movement toward cooperation.

At present some 12,000 farmers' cooperative associations in this country transact an annual business of over $2,500,000,000, according to Vera McCrea of the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, a leader in the dairy eastern field. Many of these have centralized their sales activity in large organizations doing an annual business of between $10,000,000 and $100,000,000. With 7,000,000 farmers in organization an appreciable percentage of the 6,500,000 American farms.

Agriculture is in pretty much the same situation as are many manufacturing industries. Exactly as industry has already found the problems through production efficiency and distribution, so must agriculture solve its problems. A ready market and profitable prices for goods can only be had when farmers unite to place themselves on a bargaining footing with dealers to whom they sell. The bigger the business, the better the bargaining power—and the fast growth of farm cooperatives indicates that agriculture is appreciating that fact and is developing accordingly.

GETTING BUSINESS GLOOM BEHIND US

By ROME C. STEPHENSON

President American Bankers Association

THERE is such a thing as overstaying a depression just as there is of overstaying a welcome. Recession making the great majority miss the turn in a room and modern confidence makes them miss it in a recession. A leading New York banker was asked recently what he could tell him a turn for the better had come. About 10 to 18 months after it has happened," he candidly replied.

R. C. STEPHENSON

There is more confidence in that remark than appears on the surface. As more and more manufacturers and business men realize that the turn has already come and that they are overstaying the time to adopt constructive policies, they begin cautiously to prepare their selling campaigns to expand with their production, to enlarge their working forces and increase their commitments for supplies. Into the enlivening weight of their influences that finally raises the pressure of confidence to the dynamic power of recovery.

The surest way to bring the bottom out of the business depression is to raise the pressure of public confidence to the point of irresistible and dynamic force. It can inevitably been the push of that force which has started recovery in the past, and it is the gathering power of this force now which will start recovery from this present depression.

It is a favorable sign of the times that these seems to be general agreement that the bottom of the depression has been reached and all eyes are peeled and ears cocked for the first indications that the turn for the better is in sight. Who knows but what the first intimation we know we will find ourselves looking backward instead of forward as we realize that the turn has already come. It is a rough and rocky road that runs across the bottom of the valley of business depression, and many a man is now busy sweating his old Ford from bumper to bumper to be able to take in all the scenery. So who knows but what some important changes in the landscape are already taking place.

BANKERS FAVOR GRADUAL CHANGE

National Commission Believes Local Sentiment Should Govern Evolution in Methods of Conducting Banking.

If substantial changes are to be brought about in branch banking in the United States they should originate within the states rather than from Washington, a committee plan as proposed in "trade area" branch banking plans, a recent report of the Economic Policy Commission of the American Bankers Association, declares. Such changes, it adds, should be devisely by evolutionary rather than revolutionary means.

"The extension of branch banking through state action would mean that states not now permitting state banks to have branches or also closely restricting them, would individually liberalize their laws as an expression of changing local opinion and conditions, and this doubtless would insure a deliberate, evolutionary progress," the report says. "The other method, that is, through Federal action, would mean a sweeping change for the country as a whole, for legislation granting branch banking powers to national banks in all states, regardless of local sentiment, would, of course, place an equivalent branch banking amendments in every state in the Union not now permitting or really wanting state banks to have branches, in order to keep them on a competitive equality."

Upholds State Privileges

"We find some bankers who feel that a proper stimulus to the development of branch banking would be given by the Federal Government step by step by the initiative through granting broader privileges within state lines to national banks than they now enjoy. It is argued that state governments would follow suit and let state banks and that in this way a more progressive branch banking attitude might be promoted by the national banks taking the lead. While we do not deny that there may be some merit in this view as to the method of procedure, we stand firm nevertheless on the principle that no such grant of powers by national authority should cross state lines or exceed the limits of state legislative action, and would grant to their states power.

"Moreover we believe that in the choice of the seven these two possible or ses of extending branch banking there can be no hesitancy. We would be generally opposed to any forcible imposition of branch banking on the states through the medium of the national banking system. We believe that each state should be free to choose for itself the type of banking powers state by state where, if, and as local conditions and sentiment might be ready for a change."

All preserves should be cooked rapidly until they are clear and tender, and the fruit should hold its original shape. The finished product should be bright, sparkling, and with the plump fruit really distinguishable throughout. Slowly cooked preserves are dull, dark, and not nearly so attractive.

WOOD WISDOM
If you buy home materials at home you know what you are getting wrong, you can get kind of lumber purchased at once and get things adjusted well. Not so when you are dealing with a stranger at a distance. When trouble is about, ask the fellow who has had trouble.

If you don't you are right and when you are wrong—you are married.

Yes, you have heard about the fellow who lit a match to see if his tank was empty and found it wasn't; also the fellow who raised to the ceiling to heat the room, but didn't. Did you hear of your neighbor who bought a new roof from a smooth stranger from the big city, thinking it was better than Mule-Hide, and soon found to his grief that it wasn't? It takes only a little investigation at home to make sure before streaming and it pays big.

A customer demands the best from his local dealer and gets it, and the dealer in fact see permits or can and it there is a chance for a satisfactory adjustment. The place where he can get all of that is the best place to trade.

Though Mule-Hide roofing is beautiful in its range of colors, its greatest beauty is about it is its dependability. Not all of it, carries a double guarantee. Better let us explain to you what that means. It won't cost you a penny to find about it.

Your foreclosure had a lot to be said for it. The one who bought for 75c fish, and one went to fishing without bait, while the other would not part in his line when he had a bite.

ERRORS THAT BRING JOY TO COLLECTORS

Blunders are frequently expensive. Sometimes they have a high market value, as in philately; time day in and when the issuing of engraving and printing was considered by the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in Washington, D. C., and Baker Lake, Northwest Territories, has been flown by Canadian government air surveys and by aerial prospectors.

The native Indians, Eskimos and Royal Canadian mounted policemen of the Hudson Bay district have not before had such distinguished aerial visitors, but the sight of an airplane, either in winter or summer, is no new experience to them.

Few persons except those who have seen it, realize the high degree to which northern Canada has organized its air transport. Using water routes, open in summer, in less half down a wide network of fuel and supply stations at strategic points. All around Hudson Bay, the convenient lakes; down the Mackenzie river to Lake Athabaska; about terse plane and Great Bear lakes and along the Arctic coast, and down the Yukon, these depots are set up. Now practically every district in continental Canada is within flying range of one of these stations. In fact, if you picture the Canadian airways as linked up with the air net in the United States, the broad statement is true that, given good weather, no place on the North American continent is you more than one or two days' flight from a railway.

It was in survey work and in patrols of her millions of acres of fur and reserves that Canada first used planes. The first attempt to use a plane on a long distance commercial mission was made by an oil company in 1921. To meet an emergency, it started two all-metal monoplanes on skis from the railroad at Fours river on a 1,200-mile flight to Norman on the Mackenzie river. The wealth of the British Guiana Long Hill, owned by Arthur Hind of Utica, it is a native spectacled in the color of the 4-cent stamp—a drab-looking one, to be sure, as "arrest" a stamp is popularly known as one could have seen. But this unconcentrate rests Mr. Hind said $50,000, and it will hold the primacy, for it is impossible that a more attractive unpictured stamp can come to light.—New York Herald Tribune.

Investigation Seems to Put Razorback in Bad

Spreading a dirty work a razorback hog may not be an attractive enterprise, but such a procedure recently yielded some valuable information to the state forest commission of Mississippi. Following their first successful tack was a serious destroyer of longleaf pines, and wanting to get irrefutable evidence on the subject, P. N. Howell, one of the commissioners, followed a hog for eight and one-fourth hours, from eight o'clock in the morning to four that afternoon. In that time Mr. Howell counted 650 trees which the hog rooted out. At this same rate, the commissioner calculated, in 100 days the razorback would chip 32,500 trees valued at $2,000, based on the cost of their growing and planting—a sum more than forty times the value of the hog itself.

First Concrete Road

The first concrete road of any consequence in the world was constructed in Ireland, and was eleven feet wide by one mile long. The American Magnetism, in a study of modern road building, tells the story of his Irish experiment. It was ordered by Sir Hugh Lane, a Dublin brewer and art connoisseur, who had become president of the League of American Wheelmen.

Aviation in Canada

One of Canada's Far-Flung Trading Posts.

Dispatched by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.

ALTHOUGH the retired attorney of Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh's vacation flight in Japan and China roiled them over many square miles of practically unexplored territory in northwest Canada, much of the country they traversed between Washington, D. C., and Baker Lake, Northwest Territories, has been flown by Canadian government air surveys and by aerial prospectors.

The native Indians, Eskimos and Royal Canadian mounted policemen of the Hudson Bay district have not before had such distinguished aerial visitors, but the sight of an airplane, either in winter or summer, is no new experience to them.

Few persons except those who have seen it, realize the high degree to which northern Canada has organized its air transport. Using water routes, open in summer, it has laid down a wide network of fuel and supply stations at strategic points. All around Hudson Bay, the convenient lakes; down the Mackenzie river to Lake Athabaska; about terse plane and Great Bear lakes and along the Arctic coast, and down the Yukon, these depots are set up. Now practically every district in continental Canada is within flying range of one of these stations. In fact, if you picture the Canadian airways as linked up with the air net in the United States, the broad statement is true that, given good weather, no place on the North American continent is you more than one or two days' flight from a railway.

It was in survey work and in patrols of her millions of acres of fur and reserves that Canada first used planes. The first attempt to use a plane on a long distance commercial mission was made by an oil company in 1921. To meet an emergency, it started two all-metal monoplanes on skis from the railroad at Fours river on a 1,200-mile flight to Norman on the Mackenzie river. The wealth of the British Guiana Long Hill, owned by Arthur Hind of Utica, it is a native spectacled in the color of the 4-cent stamp—a drab-looking one, to be sure, as "arrest" a stamp is popularly known as one could have seen. But this unconcentrate rests Mr. Hind said $50,000, and it will hold the primacy, for it is impossible that a more attractive unpictured stamp can come to light.—New York Herald Tribune.

"March 20 . . . Will try and have a new 'prop' made here (ash sleigh boards are available, also some glue. And a Hudson's Bay company man around Johnson is an old cabinetmaker . . . We can use the damaged aeroplane as a pattern and use the Caledonia Institute warehouse here.

"March 31. Found snowshoe rips. Borrowed some bead thread so that the boards can be clamped tightly together in making the laminated propeller.

"April 15. Tested the new propeller. It works satisfactorily."

The amazing degree to which planes are being used in the north was illustrated in this same Mr. Howell counted 650 trees which the hog rooted out. At this same rate, the commissioner calculated, in 100 days the razorback would chip 32,500 trees valued at $2,000, based on the cost of their growing and planting—a sum more than forty times the value of the hog itself.

Their anchor dragged and their skin smashed on the rocks. They saved their emergency kits, made a fire on shore from the wreckage of their plane, and cooked breakfast. They walked 30 miles along the beach to a lighthouse and signal station, to report their whereabouts.

Retrieving them a flight up the Anlaupaschasan river, one pilot brought with him his old father. When invited to ride, the frail man accepted in his only garment at the prospect. He calmly donned helmet and goggles and settled himself in the front cockpit, as if flying was an everyday affair with him. In a half hour he flew downstream a distance which took previously it had taken him six days to cover by canoe.

On landing he climbed out stretched himself, and said in his native tongue:

"Hen canoe! How much fun now?"

That Indian saw the advantage of air travel in the north country. He doubtedly he prophetically pictured to himself his children as easily save for himself and family in their long annual canoe trips to their hunting grounds, if they owned such a "hen canoe."

Flying in Winter.

In north Quebec, flying goes on summer and winter.

On a January morning Capt. Kenneth Saunders, chief pilot of the Canadian Fairchild company, started south with an engineer and a Hudson's Bay company official, on a visit to some of the northern trading posts. Unless one flies it usually takes six weeks of smashing on snowshoes, with a dog team to haul baggage, to reach these wilderness outposts. Regions between posts are totally uninhabited. Snow lies from four to six feet deep; trails, such as they are, usually follow the lakes and rivers, through a broken country of small timber.

When Saunders and party left Rouyn the day was bright and fair, but the thermometer was 22 below. An hour or two later Anticamichekan they sighted the first trading post and circled to land on the frozen river. Either they struck a soft spot, where a warm spring had thawed the ice or else an early fall of snow on this too-low river covered a thicker formation; anyway, the plane broke through. The engineer had barely time to crawl from the cabin before the whole fuselage was under water.

Luckily, they were near the post, and Tom Moar, the Indian in charge, volunteered to walk out the hundred miles to civilization with a message. He started away within half an hour, taking only an ax, some matches and a chunk of moose meat. He made the trip in the record time of five days, sleeping little, on the second and fourth nights, in holes in the snow lined with balsam boughs, and tramping continuously the rest of the time.

Meantime the travelers set about salvaging their plane. They made a platform of logs around the machine on which to work. As the water was not deep, a tripod of poles cut from the woods was built over the aircraft and its wings were removed.

Salvaged Their Plane.

Seven days later a new snowshoe reached the scene with heating tackle and tools. The wrecked plane was moved safely to shore. A tent was erected around the front of the fuselage and the engine, which was a well mass of ice. This ice was chopped out, and then a stove was lit in the tent, and gradually the cabin and engine thawed out.

The metal propeller, badly bent, was straightened and the engine reassembled. The carburetor, though frozen in a solid block of ice for eight days, again worked perfectly.

On the 6th of February the plane was again ready for flight. Accompanied by the rescue machine, which had made several trips to ferry in gas, provisions, and little gifts for Mrs. Moar, and her family (so whose hospitality the crew had been dependent during the salvage operations), it took off safely and flew back to Rouyn.

Northern British Columbia is as inaccessible a country as can be found in this continent. Cut off from the Pacific by the panhandle of Alaska, with its coastal mountains and glaciers, it can be reached only by the Stikine, the Peace or the Liard rivers and their tributaries. The Cassiar, as the district is called, teems with game, and, like all British Columbia, has been for the last 75 years the happy hunting ground of the prospector. Placer gold claims have been worked on many of its streams since the days following the gold strike of '49 in California. The country is now deserted, though abandoned log cabins still can be found on many creeks and bars. One hears many stories of lost mines and mystery valleys rich in hidden gold. The scattered Indian populations live by trapping beaver, lynx, marten, wolf, fisher, otter, ermine, wolverine and fox, all of which are plentiful.

Chinchilla Rabbits

Many theories have been advanced as to the origin of the chinchilla rabbit. The domestic rabbits now being produced for food and for fur purposes came from the European hare. Some breeders maintain that the chinchilla rabbit originated by crossing the French silver with the so-called Belgian hare, combining the silvery blue color of the silver with the distinct color rings found in the under fur of the hotaman.

POULTRY

KEEP THE GROWING CHICKS WELL FED

Several Rations Economical and Effective.

Growing chicks should be well fed to insure health, protection against disease, rapid, economical gains while they are young, and quality flavor in the meat of broilers and fryers, says A. C. Dillard, extension poultryman at the Colorado Agricultural college.

A simple, economical and effective growing ration for the farm flock can be made, Dillard suggests, from the following ingredients:

The scratch mixture may be cracked corn of a size suitable for the chicks, whole wheat or a mixture of equal parts of these two grains.

A mash mixture may be composed of the following feeds, he says: Flour, yellow cornmeal, 25 pounds; bran, 25 pounds; alfalfa, 25 pounds; meat meal or meat scrap, 10 pounds; bone meal, 4 pounds; salt, 1 pound. Ground wheat may be substituted for the bran and shorts, if desired.

When milk is available in any form, it can very profitably be fed to the flock, it is added.

"The mash should be kept in suitable, non-wasting feeders, allowing the chicks free access to it at all times."

For complete positioning mash. And feeding space should be provided so that at least one-fourth of the flock can feed at one time.

"The grain can be fed in hoppers, morning or evening in amounts that the birds can clean up readily, or fed in a litter of straw that should be changed occasionally as a sanitary precaution.

"Green feed is a very important part of the chick's diet. When a green range is not available, although lettuce or silage greens are not available, 5 to 10 pounds of chicken feed should be added to each 100 pounds of the above mash mixture."

Rotation of Hen Yard Has Many Advantages

Unlike the poultry range in two, suggests the poultry department at the Ohio State university, and rotate the flock with green crops.

If the flock is permitted to cover the entire range all the time they will soon kill all the vegetation around the poultry house. This will make it necessary to provide green feed from another source and at greater expense. The yard will also become unsanitary and often a sea of mud after a hard rain.

Early fall sown rye provides an ideal fall supply of green feed for winter. Rape, sown in early summer, will provide succulence in the ration a large part of the summer. It can be seeded as soon as it is three or four inches high. Half the yard is given to rape and pasture for the flock while the other half is in preparation for another crop. A woven wire fence five feet high will serve to keep the chickens off the growing crop on the range. The fence should be staked well at the bottom, or usually nose chickens go under fences than over them.

Hen That Molts Early Not a Good Producer

Contrary to the opinion of some poultry men, the hen that molts early usually does not begin laying again early in the winter says F. B. Anderson of the New York State College of Agriculture. In fact, the early molters usually require more time to renew their feathers than the late molters. The early molting hen illustrates a lack of high production ability.

If the egg production goes down slowly and a few tons start molting each week it is a safe practice to cull these individuals. However, if a large percentage of the flock suddenly stops laying and begins to molt, it is best to check on the management of the flock, and would not necessarily mean that 4% of the hens were culls, Mr. Andrews advises.

Sudden changes of feed, a bad infestation of lice or mites, or insufficient amounts of feed and water may throw the flock into a molt.

Poultry Facts

In 1855, New York state grew 16,000 acres of beans and 958,000 acres of wheat. In 1925 there were 234,000 acres of beans and 31,4000 acres of wheat.

Constitutional vigor in pullets is indicated by a deep yellow color in the legs and beak, and by bright prominent eyes, and a well balanced head. The size of the bird is also important and only those pullets of good size should be kept.

FINE OLD GARDEN TO BE "RESTORED"

Good News for Lovers of Horticulture.

The oldest botanical garden in the United States is located within the limits of the city of Philadelphia and is one of the glories of the horticulturally minded country. The two-hundredth anniversary of the founding of this old garden was celebrated on June 5 and 6 of this year, with ceremonies suited to the occasion. The opening day was spent in special exercises of a historical nature, and on the second day the visitors were guests at the garden, tea being served in the old home of the founder, John Bartram, a section of which was built in 1740 by Swedish settlers, and became the foundation from which Mr. Bartram built later. The building was purchased by Mr. Bartram in 1728, and the original house still remains in the garden enclosure.

The Bartram garden is now undergoing a process of restoration that will bring it back to its original form a fitting tribute to the plot of land that has been devoted to garden purposes for two hundred years. The house has been restored to its original form and now the garden through the efforts of the garden clubs of Philadelphia and surrounding country, "it be made to reason to be as nearly as possible the garden of the old days. These clubs have undertaken as their free work to restore to the garden the native rhododendrons, mountain laurel and other evergreens.

John Bartram was a native Lancaster, Pa., near Philadelphia. He lived to the good old age of seventy-eight and died in Bartram house in 1777. The garden is located on the west bank of the Schuylkill river, and for many years it was a most isolated spot. It was through his voluminous correspondence with Peter Collinson, a grocer in London, England, and the exchange of many seeds and plants, that Mr. Bartram's work became well known.

Another famous botanical garden which ranks as the finest in the world is at Buitenzorg, Java, this garden in its present state of perfection being the product of nearly a century of effort on the part of the Dutch inhabitants of Java. So wonderful are the flowers and plants that the garden, which includes 96 acres, is known as "The Garden of the East." L. C. Hiseed in the Gardeners Chronicle tells us of the vegetation in this garden of wonders. The governor-general's house, which is located in the garden, is supposed, we are informed, through the finest avenue of trees in the world. These are Kiassi trees reaching 100 feet England and have tall straight trunks covered with large horn ferns, staghorns, ferns, orchids and every type of epiphytic and air plant that the climate will permit. Mr. Hiseed also describes a palm that attains about 40 feet and has a "wilderness of crashing nuts." Among other new plants were branches 200 feet in length. He makes note of another palm that bears the largest fruit and the largest leaves of any known tree, the fruit being two feet in diameter and the leaves 10 feet. None of the trees rise to a height of 200 feet before the branches spread.

Motor Busses Supplant Ancient Railroad Line

Motor busses have supplanted the service provided by the first steam railroad line operated in the United States and its abandonment has been recommended to the interstate commerce commission. The line, 27 miles long, was constructed by the Delaware & Hudson railroad in 1829 between Carbondale and Honesdale, Pa., to transport "stone coal," as anthracite was then known. The Stourbridge Lion, first steam locomotive operated on the United States was taken for a trial run on the line in August, 1829. The coal was shipped that the rails wooden stringers capped with rolled iron strips, were not strong enough to sustain the locomotive and the steam engines were abandoned until the roadbed was strengthened several years later.

Broken Rhythm

Al Jolson tells the story of a golfer whose caddie suddenly started lilting. The caddie's afternoon symphonies provided auto enough for eight holes. Then, at a critical moment requiring the utmost concentration, silence on the caddie's part as the golfer missed the ball completely. He straightened up and knocked the surprised caddie down.

"What did you do that for?" asked the astonished club fanfier as he rose to pick himself up. "I didn't do anything that time."

"I know you didn't," said the enraged player, "but I'd advanced to a professional flow in Lester's Magazine.

Sticker for Aunts

Aunty had taken little Tommy to the park and he was greatly interested in all that he saw, and especially in the animals and the fish in the aquariums. It was on the way home that he demanded:

"What are cents? I heard someone talking about them but I didn't see any."

"Oh, you poor dear," cooed the aunt. "Cents mean and funny boys are sealed rules, and no sticky cents are allowed." Aunty didn't want to spoil her pronunciation.

Tommy pondered over this information for some time and then asked:

"Aunty, what do they call funny cents?"

ADEQUATE MOISTURE IN HOME AIR PROTECTS NATURAL BEAUTY

LOOK TO HOME AIR FOR SKIN, HAIR ILLS

Find Overheated Stagnant Air Arch-Enemy of Health as It Is of Beauty.

BEAUTY specialists of a rather new line of air conditioned work, good health and beauty, have observed for centuries that the right living conditions are not accidental. It is during the winter months that they follow experiences the greatest difficulty in maintaining the proper conditions for health and beauty, according to the findings of the William Institute of Thermo-Air Health, and supply the formula. Due to the fact that in some of the best offices of the best hotels in Detroit, New York and the fashionable resorts of Florida and Europe, the William Institute of Thermo-Air Health has been engaged to install and operate the air conditioning equipment in the home, it is possible to bring the benefits of this new science to the home with ease and economy of operation.

The fact of moisture in the home air has been recognized for years and many home owners have tried to overcome it by means of water pans and humidifiers, but most of the devices in use do not have sufficient evaporating capacity for supplying the required moisture. This is not sufficient for the fact that in a home of five or six rooms at least eight gallons of water should be evaporated daily during the winter months to offset the moisture deficiency. However, the problem has been simply and economically solved by means of putting the air of the vapor air type. Refrigerating machinery is especially designed and humidifier which receives its water supply direct from the house water mains. This humidifier has capacity for evaporating not less than eight gallons of water per hour for 3 to 12 gallons of water daily, according to weather conditions. The equipment is also designed to remove heat and to protect the home against overheating, bringing the air to keep the temperature of the rooms at any degree in a season of the year. Air conditioning, thus enabling them to perform their normal functions, and of such energy and vitality that it can not be found in any other way. Not only are normally dry air causes the skin to become harsh and dull, but it also causes natural environment and colds. The latter, too, is generally effected by the dry air because it is favorable to germs and infection.

Heating and ventilating methods, however, has come in the course of luxury systems, but in the case of the home is considered, there no longer be confusion in the minds of the health effects of air by these favorable methods. Most ventilation systems are those that heated the air and by which the air is moved and otherwise conditioned, and the only means of generating all the heat that is necessary for that air is by the use of coal. The result is that with economy high living is decidedly unfavorable to health and beauty. The air is dry and stagnant and warm air has positive deficiency of moisture and not return to Charlevoix Tuesday after spending the summer at their cottage.

Among the citations which compromised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Let Israel rejoice in him that made him: let the children of Zion be joyful in their king" (Ps. 149:2).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Give true happiness, man must harmonize with his Principle, Divine Love; the Son must be to accord with the Father, in every harmony with Christ. According to divine Science, man is in a degree as perfect as the Mind that forms him" (p. 257).

RARE SIGHT EVEN FOR GAME WARDEN

To witness a timberwolf stalking a deer is an unusual sight even for a woodsman. Recently an entire party of tourists taking a boat trip down the Tahquamenon River to the famous Big Falls saw such an incident.

The wolf, intent upon his prey, did not observe the, nearby boat. He stalked the deer, leaped and ran after the animal through the woods. The play was staged in an open marsh and as the two animals raced away and disappeared into the woods the deer was still holding its own.

Arthur Mothmer, state warden, who reported the incident found the trail and set traps. Four days later he found the wolf, which had walked into the trap, carrying a fawn in her mouth. The wolf weighed approximately one hundred pounds.

ANNUAL MEET OF CHURCH ASS'N

CHEBOYGAN CONGREGATIONAL ASSN. HERE THURS., FRI.

The 54th annual meeting of the Cheboygan Association of Congregational Churches will be held at the Charlevoix church this week, Thursday and Friday.

The program will begin Thursday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. An interesting feature of the Thursday meetings will be the examination ordination of Mr. U. E. Priest of Gaylord. The ordination sermon will be delivered by Rev. C. J. Strang of Bessemin and the charge to the Pastor by Rev. C. H. Hauger of the state office.

The Friday program will be featured by the appearance of Dr. Stephen A. Lloyd the new State Superintendent. Other speakers on the Association programs are Rev. and Mrs. Truesdell Hall of Alpena, Rev. Robert Baird of Cheboygan, Rev. W. W. Gield of Vanderbilt, Miss Dora Bamberg of Cheboygan, Miss Helen Dingley from China, Dr. Roscoe Kedzie of Lansing and Mrs. Hattie V. Gallup of Charlevoix.

A fellowship Dinner will be served Friday evening at 5:30. The public is invited to all sessions and the dinner. Tickets for the dinner are 50 cents.

One of the speakers on this occasion, Dr. W. R. Kedzie of Lansing, grew up on a campus and comes of a family of educators. This is probably the reason he has always had such a deep interest in education and especially in Christian higher education. He is Secretary of Education, Institutions of the Congregational Educational Society and says he would rather have this position than any other position the denomination has to offer. This is because he regards it as one of the most important things the denomination has ever undertaken. Leadership in the field of Christian higher education has been one of the most beautiful and powerful contributions of Congregationalism to civilization. He believes this leadership is still to be exercised and that it offers one of our greatest opportunities. If a senior has desk in the outstanding link between the colleges and the churches.

This division of the Congregational Education Society seeks to keep before the minds of our people the strategic importance of these institutions of higher education. They are training the young men and women to whom the church must look for its future leadership. The amount and quality of that leadership will depend in large measure upon the kind of Christian education that they receive in these colleges. If the ideals of Christian service are to be given due emphasis and the spirit of research, the colleges must have the sympathetic interest of the church."

Dr. Kedzie graduated from Oberlin College and from Oberlin Seminary. Oliver received the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He served on pastorates in Wilmington, Johns and Pontiac, Mich., Illinois, Illinois and First Church, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dr. Kedzie will serve under the auspices of the Commission on Missions as the home missionary representative on the Michigan conference year team from September 17 to October 16 and 17 inclusive.

"I am all for young China" declares Helen Dimsey, 9 N., "more extraordinary" as the Tatky Hospital, North China. And among those it is—for she not only supervises the care of her beloved brown baby patients, but trains Chinese nurses as well. "My darling nurses" she calls them as she watches them during recreation hours tasting for the first time the joy of outdoor sports.

A contagious Christian cheerfulness, undaunted by circumstances and spiced with delicious humor, makes Helen Dimsey a shining personality to meet. She went to Tatky seven years ago after being graduated from Berea College and the West Suburban Hospital of Chicago, reaching there following a damaging fire at the hospital. The utter lack of the most necessary equipment, including bedding, surgical dressings and garments, would have overwhelmed a less determined young woman. Before long, however, canary birds and gay geraniums aided and abetted Nurse Dimsey in creating an attitude of friendliness and cheer, where diplomacy and sometimes almost an aesthetic are needed to separate timid parents from their sick children!

"We are teaching fathers and mothers to send their ill children to us," Miss Dimsey now reports in triumph. Maternity cases numbered seven in 1927, and 67 in 1930, made a running start in 1931 by averaging

STATE HAS NO JURISDICTION OVER WATER LEVELS OF INLAND LAKES

The state has no jurisdiction in regulating the water levels of inland lakes and any remedy must be obtained through the several boards of supervisors or through the courts, according to the Department of Conservation.

The Department has always had complaints from individuals concerning levels of certain lakes rising or falling and since last spring when the effects of the 1930 drought were first seriously evident, the number of such complaints has grown rapidly.

Last year's drought together with the unusually rainfall again this season has brought the levels of the streams and lakes down to an unprecedented stage. In many instances dams have proved to be useless, with the exercise of supply cut off.

According to the department the only relief obtainable is through the Supervisors or through the courts who have jurisdiction with respect to establishing the level of the navigable inland waters of the state under the provisions of Act 275 of the Public Acts of 1921.

The Doctor will be located in his new quarters October 1, where he will conduct his practice in invites the inspect his location and clients requested to come for professional service.

Press Association Meets At Newberry

The annual fall get-together meeting of the Michigan Press Association is scheduled to meet at Newberry for a two day session Saturday and Sunday, October 3 and 4.

A variety of entertainments will be on the regular program. Golf for those who enjoy thinning the pills, theatre parties, dinner parties, etc., while the Newberry Country Club will hold open house for the ladies. Of course ladies are expected to attend the entertainments and social functions, one of which will be arranged for the time when members of the association are holding their business meeting.

Sunday, a trip by boat to Tequamenon Falls, famous for their scenic beauty, is being featured in the announcements of the meeting.

HEAVY LOCAL THUNDER STORM WEDNESDAY NIGHT

Charlevoix was visited Wednesday night, by a heavy rain storm, accompanied by a moderate electric storm that continued for several hours.

The storm was not severe but was an amount of water fell. The storm at first intermittent, finally settled down to business, raining hard and continuously for five or six hours.

Trees were blown down and several seven babies in the first six days.

Toastmaster claims Helen Dimsey as his daughter, and before coming to China she worked in a mining camp and in the mountains of Kentucky, where her parents as well had been serving as teachers.

"I have a brain," said a wee voice to Miss Dimsey one day. Looking down she saw a sixth little face and a tiny hand tightly holding a diminutive wisp of hair. "Of course you have a head," cried Miss Dimsey sympathetically, and thereby hangs a tale—a tall and a hair ribbon. "Back home" someone had sent the hospital a dozen bright ribbons which were being judiciously distributed. This little one got a yellow ribbon. Dazzlingly she gazed into the mirror. "I wish you could have seen her face," Miss Dimsey writes. "Thought-fully she gazed into the mirror—"I wish you could have seen her face." Miss Dimsey writes. "Thoughtfully she gazed into the mirror—"I wish you could have seen her face." Miss Dimsey writes. "Thoughtfully she gazed into the mirror—"I wish you could have seen her face." Miss Dimsey writes. "Thoughtfully she gazed into the mirror—"I wish you could have seen her face." Miss Dimsey writes. "Thoughtfully how wonderful it was to make a little child happy—and I wish there were ribbons for all little girls with braids."

That's Helen Dimsey.

Miss Dimsey will serve under the auspices of the Commission on Missions as the foreign missionary representative on the Michigan conference year team from September 17 to October 16 and 17 inclusive.

LOUISE DRESSER WILL BE SEEN IN ROGERS' FILM

Making her first screen appearance in almost two years, Louise Dresser, enacts the role of Will Rogers' wife in "Lightnin'," Fox Movietone comedy drama, adapted from John Golden's successful stage play, coming to the Palace Theatre next Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Dresser's previous screen performance was in "The 3 Sisters," which followed "Mother Knows Best" in which she was outstanding as the mother. Again she is a mother in "Lightnin'" and her daughter is played by Claire Dubrey, youthful daughter of George M. Cohan, celebrated stage comedian and successful producer.

Miss Dresser's part is long expert-ence on the stage. Miss Dresser is a finished artist and her cultivated voice is of a quality that compels regard. She is one of the real soloists of the talking screen and possesses a charming personality.

Rogers portrays the role of "Lightnin' Bill Jones," who loves liquor and loves work. He is a whimsical, good natured but harmless liar.

Supporting the star is a cast that embraces many favorites of the stage and screen. In addition to Miss Dresser and Helen Cohan it includes J. M. Kerrigan, Joel McCrea, Sharon Lynn, Lake Cosgrave, Frank Campeau, Joyce Compton, Jason Robards, Ruth Warren, Phil Tead, Walter Percival, Charlotte Walker, Gladys Montgomery, Blanche Lacy and Thomas Jefferson.

A score or more of gorgeously gowned divorcees add atmosphere color to the picture and photographed and recorded in the vicinity of Lake Tahoe, California, some of the most beautiful and picturesque scenic backgrounds to be found in America are afforded.

The picture was directed by Henry King, whose production "To Table Dance" won him the Photoplay Gold Medal for the best picture of the year. He also directed such successful as "Stella Dallas" and "Hell Harbor."

Miss Lois Fessenden, member of class 1930, C. H. S. will continue her educational work at Oliver College and has entered upon her work at that place, with the opening of the fall semester.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Loewenstein of Chicago, arrived here a few days ago and are at their cottage, where they contemplate spending several weeks of the fall season.

First M.S.C. Home Extension Lecture

The first of the M. S. C. Home Extension lectures was held in the Community Room September 9th.

"House Furnishing" is the topic this year and Miss Gertrude Reese, who presents the lectures, is a very interesting speaker.

It is to be regretted that so few group leaders could be present on the date set, but it was announced in the early fee Charlevoix women.

Those present were Mrs. Francis and Mrs. Mason of Phelps. Mrs. Megginson and Mrs. Williams of Marion Center, Mrs. Klooga and Mrs. Coolsing of Ellsworth; Mrs. Lindley and Mrs. Evers of Bayness; and Mrs. Salisbury of Charlevoix.

The balance of the lectures will be held October 14th, November 4th and 18th and December 2nd. Groups which were not represented at the first lecture can perhaps arrange for some of the leaders present to relay the work to them so not to lose out on their Extension Certificate on Achievement Day.

M. E. PASTOR HAS BEEN TRANSFERRED TO CLARE

Rev. J. E. Lockyear, pastor of the M. E. Society for several years past retires from the local charge and his appointment made at the recent conference, just closed at Grand Rapids, will continue his work with Clare, Michigan, and the surrounding country as field for future religious endeavors.

Rev. W. W. Hurd, who held the Clare appointment succeeds Mr. Lockyer in the Charlevoix work and in this will be assisted by Mrs. Hurd who is an ordained minister.

Mrs. Theodore Rasseur closed her summer home of Mercer Blvd after occupying it for the summer, and returns to St. Louis, Mo., Wednesday, accompanied by her sister, Miss Emma Miller.

Mrs. George Rasseur returns to St. Louis Wednesday after occupying her Mercer Blvd. cottage during the summer season.

FOOTBALL SEASON OPENS SEPT. 19TH

PLENTY OF CANDIDATES FOR C. H. S. FOOTBALL TEAM

Coach Klake will have no difficulty in making up a football team for the season's games according to the showing made at athletic field Monday afternoon when the first practice of the year was called.

The coach found thirty-five uniformed and fifteen without uniforms at the field, all prospective players and all anxious to become members of the "C" H. S. 1931 squad.

Naturally some changes will be made from the 1930 squad, due to ineligibility of some of the former members of the team, while the big proportion of the 1930 squad remain on the eligible list. Among the latter are Joe Arvilla, Norman Ance, DeVere Bird, Homer Struthers, Jerry Walker, and Victor McInnis, who found regularly in the line up of last year, with other capable players, viz., Hugh Parker, Joseph Smith, George LaBlanch, Charles Novotny, David Duck, Ian Gordon and possibly one or two more who have demonstrated their qualities to take on regular team work activities.

There are plenty of other students anxious to make the team as is shown by the number who appeared at the field Monday night for practice thereafore it is probable that Coach Klake will find little difficulty in making a strong combination from the material at hand.

The first game of the local squad is called for Saturday, September 19 at (tinaw). This probably will be witnessed by a goodly number of Charlevoix fans anxious to see the new squad in action.

SEPTEMBER MEET OF W. C. T. U. HELD

The September meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union was held last Friday afternoon in the Community Room with Mrs. Margaret Jacobs acting as hostess. This was the first meeting since the exchange of quarters from the Central to Grade building and everyone was pleased with the change.

The devotional service was conducted by Mrs. Lois Campbell and the topic "Latest Scientific Facts" which had been assigned to Mrs. Millan was presented by Dr. F. E. McMillan.

The L. T. L. Committee was instructed to organize that work at an early date. The flag committee had purchased U. S. flags as directed and at the close of the meeting replaced the worn and faded flags in the various school rooms with new ones.

Mrs. F. H. Campbell was elected a delegate to the State Convention to be held in Jackson, November 7 to 11.

Mrs. Cora Rogers, Mrs. Martha Leonard, Mrs. Mary Hamilton, Mrs. Lois Campbell and Miss Anna Merrill were elected delegates to the district convention at Bellaire, Sept. 22 and 23. Many others plan to attend this meeting as a general invitation has been extended to all temperance workers in the district.

New Schedule For Mailboat Marold !!

Thereafter and until further notice the Marold II sails from St. James at 7:00 a m arriving at Charlevoix 10:30 a. m. Leaving Charlevoix on her return trip at 4:00 p. m. arriving at St. James at 4:30 p. m.

SILVERWARE, TABLE AND BED LINEN MISSING FROM MRS. MAYNE'S HOUSE

Approximately $500 worth of silverware, table and bed linen and various other articles have been surreptitiously removed from Mrs. W. Mayne's Michigan avenue cottage recently.

An effort is being made to locate the missing articles and also to apprehend the party or parties who committed the felony. At this time but little conclusive evidence has been discovered tending to show who the culprit was, nor has any of the stolen property been recovered.

Mrs. G. L. Edersheimer closed her cottage, 104 Auld Avenue, Wednesday and with her family members, returned to Chicago Wednesday.

LILA LEE REVEALS SECRET OF BEAUTY IN CARE OF THE EYES

Eye lashes and eyebrows have as much to do with the complete beauty of a woman's face as any other one feature, according to Lila Lee, who is known as one of the most vivid and attractive girls on the screen who in playing the leading role in "Woman Hungry," the Fox National picture which comes to the Palace Theatre on Thursday and Friday of next week.

Lila Lee, who has large and beautiful grey eyes, which are shadowed by curling lashes, says "Eyelashes and eyebrows are really the frame for the eyes, and too much care cannot be taken with them. This applies equally to blondes, brunettes, redheads and titian girls. All of them can add to their beauty through the proper care of their lashes. Nearly everyone has pretty eyes which fit well together style of beauty, but it is surprising how many women mar their beauty by allowing themselves to have ugly eyebrows or scanty eyelashes.

"It is simply a matter of giving them a little regular attention, no matter how sparse the lashes may be to begin with. Longer lashes make the eyes look larger and more beautiful.

"All that is needed," explains Miss Lee, "is a small bottle of sweet almond, or any other solid oil you may have at home, and a small camel's hair brush. Apply the oil with the dry brush over the eyebrows in the smooth graceful line, and across the lashes, on the underside. Do this every night.

"The trick of making the lashes curl upward, however, which adds to their beauty and charm, lies in pressing the lashes back after the oil has been applied. This causes the lashes to turn back.

"Furthermore the oil has a tendency to make the lashes look longer and silkier. It is surprising how quickly eyelashes will respond to such treatment.

"Every woman should take continual care to have her eyebrows brushed back into line long even though it is necessary at 6 or 7 a. m. to powder her nose.

"Women Hungry," a vivid romance of modern life, is photographed entirely in Technicolor, and Miss Lee's many fan fans will be delighted to see her in the first time as the vamp lady, instead of in black and white photographs. Miss Lee's hair is of the most natural charm. The picture is a Fox National production, and Sidney Blackmer plays the male lead.

W. C. T. U. Meets At Bellaire Tuesday

The Bellaire Women's Christian Temperance Union is to entertain the Annual Lower Eleventh District Convention next week beginning at 2:30 p. m. (Eastern Standard Time) Tuesday, Sept. 22 and continuing through the afternoon Wednesday. A general invitation is extended to temperance workers to be present.

A national lecturer, Mrs. Lottie Woodford, has been secured and will give addresses at both sessions on Tuesday. Tuesday evening there is to be a gold medal declamatory contest open to scholars of other schools in the district. Several Charlevoix young people will compete.

Officers will be elected Wednesday morning and other routine business transacted and in the afternoon Judge Frank H. Gilbert of Traverse City and Mrs. R. B. Armstrong of Charlevoix will address the convention.

MRS L. E. CRANDALL DIES SUNDAY NIGHT

Mrs. L. E. Crandall, following an illness of long duration passed away at her family home on Sheridan St. Sunday night. Funeral services will be held at the home of her sister, Mrs. Robert Mitchell Tuesday afternoon with her pastor, Rev. G. Russell Parker officiating.

Mrs. Crandall was a daughter of the late John Ward one of the pioneer families of this region. She was almost 84 years of age and a lifelong resident of this region.

She is survived by her husband, one daughter, Mrs. Arthur Weikart of this city, a son Verl of LaCrosse, Wisconsin and the sisters, Mrs. Robert Mitchell herein mentioned.

Mrs. Ray MacArthur of Flint, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Kilcher of this city drove up Tuesday, accompanied by Mr. Eckinger's mother, Mrs. Dave Eckinger and Mrs. R. H. Wilson. They are returning to their homes in Flint tomorrow.

DUCK HUNTING SHOOTING HOURS FOR THIS SEASON

A table of duck shooting hours for the conservation of waterfowl has been issued by the Department of Conservation.

This table shows that hours during which ducks may be hunted each day of the season will open at 7:00 a. m. and continue until 5:00 p. m. daily, except Sundays when the hours are from 12 noon to 5:00 p. m.

Hunting prior to the opening of the season, or hunting on game sanctuary closed to the season when prohibited by law, or hunting with any device not duly licensed or authorized and under the laws of the state of Michigan is punishable with a fine of not more than $100 or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than 90 days.

Captain John N. Chambers has decided to remain at his home on Round Lake Mackinac Island, his former home, and consents to make the change he has made and remain there for the winter on the S. S. James E. Sanford, now in the Charlevoix harbor.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN MAKING YOUR FARM HOME BEAUTIFIED?

We are glad to announce that plans have been definitely made to have a Farm Home Beautiful Contest in Charlevoix county. Michigan State College, myself Wednesday, September 23rd, and Beautification of the farm home will be the subject. The importance of landscaping as many farmers as can be handled in this one day.

The first two years several farm homes have been beautified which had made them a real beauty spot. Among them the homes of Ben Gaffney, Ellsworth; Guy K. Straw, Charlevoix; and Fred Dunlop, Boyne City stand out as outstanding examples of what can be done. Many others could be mentioned but space will not permit. The results are indeed surprising Mr. Unwin has always been in demand as a landscape artist. He has studied at much of the native shrubs, trees and plants as possible to carry out the natural beauty of the landscape in wonderful combinations. A few hour's effort accomplishes wonders around the home and adds much to the comfort and pleasure your farm surroundings.

If you are interested in having your farm home beautified, we suggest that you get in touch with R. C. Mellencamp, your county agent, immediately, so that a reservation can be made in this day's program. It would be advisable for you to telephone instead of writing as attention can then put it definite request ahead of you, and don't put off the matter. Your time is valuable, so is ours and we want this service this year.

Yours very truly,
R. C. Mellencamp,

Washington.—Greenwich, near London, England, most widely known of the world's stations for measuring time signals and marking out lines as to form a large part of the globe's map, is not very pretty nor is the town itself famous but most efficient from tradition.

Greenwich is an unpronounced "Grenitch" and Charles I were to believe, Greenwich would be the Naval college and headquarters of the British navy, the favorite palace of British kings dating the latter part of the Fifteenth century, the birthplace and burial of the Sovereigns.

The Greenwich observatory was established in 1675 under charles II and opened to the old sailors scientific study of the heavens.

Greenwich has been the world's official meeting place for the men of astronomy and those who use it as a result of a conference in Washington in 1884. Here longitude are measured from the meridian which passes through the center of the transit instrument in the observatory at Greenwich. Most of the world has now accepted this meridian as the zero line, counting the 24 hours of the day around the globe from it, and most of the maps and charts of the world are based on it. Only France, Spain and Portugal have not accepted it.

Greenwich has been the scene of many scientific discoveries and inventions. They are being prepared for the coronation and jubilee year of the United States treasury.

Stewed fruits intended for salads can be given a distinctive and pleasant flavor by substituting lime for an lemon or as in a liquid composed of eight tablespoonfuls lemon juice, eight tablespoonfuls orange juice, two tablespoonfuls of sugar and one tablespoonfuls of syrup and enough transparent gelatine to jell when chilled. When ready to serve, drain and serve with mayonnaise or other suitable dressing. The liquid known as a nectar, which is delicious when served by itself, may be used for jelled fruit salads.

A fruit dish that enhances the value of fruit salads and certain vegetable salads is a cranberry sherbet. The lemon juice is mixed lightly with a double sugar syrup of sugar and water, or honey, or lemon juice. This should be thoroughly chilled before serving so that the sherbet will be firm when it is served. In this way it loses some of its desirable crispness.

Uniform Motor License

Law Sought by A. M. A.

Washington.—A campaign for full reciprocity among all states in the matter of accepting motor vehicle licenses by the American Motorists Association.

The preliminary survey shows, according to the association, that in only 10 states now grant full reciprocity, while 32 states have contemplated agreements in the licensing of automobiles.

"Despite the fact that there has been a universality of action in many legislations upon the motor vehicle, considerable," says J. H. Weeks, president of the motorists' association, "there are still many states which have not adopted full reciprocal licensing."

In the general summary made by the state action was found that Mississippi and Texas permit foreign automobiles only 30 days of operation, while 18 other states, Georgia and Tennessee, give the visiting driver 90 days without the necessity of securing a license. Arkansas, Indiana, Nebraska, and Oklahoma have 60-day limitations, and there are 24 states which set a 90-day limit on owners from other states. Only in three of these did the association find a four-months' law and six months is allowed in Hawaii, Iowa, New Mexico and Virginia.

The remaining states and the District of Columbia all have reciprocal agreements.

The Useful Walrus

The walrus is the principal inhabitants of the Arctic coasts in many ways. Its flesh provides food; its hides and teeth come from its fat; the tendons from its flukes supply sewing strings; the skin of its intestines serves as window panes for huts; its ivory is used for clothes and for boats. The ivory of its tusks, as well as its oil and hide, are commercially valuable.

Wise Poultryman Will Watch for Coccidiosis

Coccidiosis is a bloody disease of poultry affecting chiefly young stock of from six weeks of age. The cause is a microscopic parasite which, when in the food, invades the lining membrane of the intestines and even finally the liver. The intestines become filled with blood and mucus, the tissue which, strings, expresses the blood and mucus with the droppings. The parasite is picked up with the food from contaminated soil where it has been deposited with the droppings, usually from old stock, which apparently recovered from the disease, but which still harbor the germs. Disease is usually incurable, hence the importance of preventing the germs from getting into the young stock. The young chicks on ground which has been used for old fowls.

Cannibalism

Illinois is the most common cause of cannibalism and self-preservation instinct. This frequently occurs when the brooder house is overcrowded or when it is too warm. Feeding sour and closely confined because of cold or stormy weather. Other conditions or causes numerous when they have had a taste of blood will continue cannibalizing the injured member of the flock until it has been removed or completely destroyed.

Caponizing Popular

Capons are becoming an increasingly popular branch of poultry keeping in some sections. Accordingly to the University of New Hampshire, the most suitable time for operating is that which allows time to properly finish the bird before market. Chickens are suitable for caponizing when they are eight weeks old. Before this age, however, the operation is not safe for most farm purposes and may be secured free of charge.

Holding Eggs for Hatching

Eggs meant for hatching should be gathered often enough to prevent chilling, for the reason that the best degree of formation the egg has been within the incubator for a period of the temperature of 100 to 107. If it is covered at a much less than that laid it has left the nest, the process of incubation continues. A temperature of 70 to 80 degrees is needed to suspend incubation. If the egg is held at a temperature of above 70 degrees, the incubation will continue.

For Growing Chicks

A very good ration for growing chicks is an all-mash feed made up as follows: 20 pounds finely ground yellow corn, 15 pounds high grade middlings, 15 pounds bran, 10 to 12 pounds fine meat scraps, 5 pounds dried buttermilk, 3 pounds alfalfa leaf meal, 1 pound ground bone and ¼ pound of salt. If you prefer sour-milk buttermilk, use the same amount of it as recommended for the dried form but dilute it with 6 parts by weight of water.

POULTRY FACTS

CULL HEN FLOCKS EARLY AND OFTEN

Poor Producers Cut Deeply Into Profits.

By culling poultry from the time they are baby chicks on through the entire period, it is possible to lessen egg production and increase the investment of the individual farmer, says Frederick Pritz, extension specialist in poultry of the Ohio State university.

Cull account records kept by 78 poultrymen in northwestern Ohio indicate that egg production per bird is one of the most important factors affecting a poultry profits. It points out, for the 78 poultrymen, 55 made less than a dollar profit per bird and had an average production of 135 eggs per bird. Thirty-six poultrymen made between a dollar and two dollars per bird and had an average production of 148 eggs. Seven farmers making a profit of more than two dollars per bird an egg production of 176 eggs during the year.

Culling is one sure way to increase the egg production per bird. To prove that only good producers will be kept on the farm, records are essential. Many of the birds that seem payers for the flock are found to be poor producers. Culling is one sure way to lessen the cost of feeding and to increase the profits.

Mr. Pritz points out that the best time to cull is when the birds are on the roosts. Then is the time to examine the vent, the pelvic bones, the comb, the wattles, the eyes and the general appearance of the bird. Any bird showing signs of poor health should be removed from the flock.

ASTROLOGY'S HOLD ON EASTERN MIND

Astrology, which is as directly one of the oldest of superstitions as astronomy is the oldest of the sciences, appears to have reached its climax in the West in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries, when its "professors" were also of great honor and importance in the courts of Europe. But the combined effort of the Copernicus astronomy, the Reformation, and the Renaissance was to sap its foundations, and after the middle of the Seventeenth century its decline was rapid and unchecked.

In the East, however, which was its own home, and where Copernicus was not for little and further for nothing, it has had a far longer life and a far stronger hold, and doubtless has a wide vogue still in Egypt, India, China, and Chaldea it was the subject of elaborate study and high honor almost from the dawn of history.

The special eminence of Chaldea in this department is attested by the Bible when it tells us of Daniel's appointment as "Rabshakedeene as "master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans and soothsayers." And it is a probable conjecture that the wise men from the East who followed the star to Bethlehem were the eastern tribes were mag; and Chaldea it was one.

If, after the lapse of 13 more centuries, we find the hybrid of the science and superstition which flourished so much in the days of the "wise men of the pipkin of silence still retains much of its former power. The fact is not to be attributed solely to the conservatism of what till the last few years has been a stumbling block East. While to the West religion has helped to discredit astrology, its hold upon the East has apparently been strengthened by the great religious reformation which now claims more than 200,000,000 adherents.

Hunting lions from airplanes is declared to be the latest thrill for sportsmen who have tired of big game hunting in the usual manner. Lions are becoming scarce in many parts of the great African game country offers great possibilities for those who are looking for a new sensation. Hence, sportsmen have been rather slow to take up the new sport, regarded as too far several reasons, it threatens the supply of wild animals, but sportsmen are joined in their anxiety by motorists who do not think one another splendid wild animal added to the list of extinct species. Conservationists declare that if countries also see in the lion a useful asset to the tourist traffic and hotel business and other grasping animals, lions without any natural enemy have become very prolific and overrun the country. Lions are also a menace to native herds, and in some districts have become a serious pest.

Cim was sleeping. Donna Sabra. And now Sabra lived little more in the new house on Kickapoo street, except for a second woman arrived that from Kansas. She ran the paper alone, as she wished it run. She ordered the house as she wished it. She very dearly ran the town of Osage. She was a power in the territory. And Yancey was gone. Cim was gone. Donna was gone. Sabra had ordered to concentrate with life, and life had taken matters out of her hands.

SUCH IS LIFE— Why, of Course!

By Charles Sugaroe

"No, you're not. No, you're not." She eyed one hand in a futile gesture on the floor as though to stop them by main force. She knew she had not lost her temper before this Indian woman—before her son. Yet this thing was, in her way of thinking, monstrous.

Cim gathered up the reins. His eyes on the restive team. I may say it in her sense of the dissolving and the Mexican currency. Father says it's very interesting. Big Elk has invited me." "Your father knows you're going? Like this?"

"Oh, yes." He cast a slight, an oblique glance, at her hand on the wheel. Her hand dropped heavily to her side. He spoke to the horses. They were off. Ruby Big Elk looked straight ahead. She had uttered no word. Sabra turned and walked back to the house. The kid terry tittled after. She was chicken. Had her pebble eyes even then. You must not go to the kitchen way. That Indian girl will see you. They are all alike. You must go around to the front way. Please. It is nothing. Oh, God, what shall I do! All those women this afternoon. Perhaps I was making a fuss over nothing. Why shouldn't he take the Indian girl to the reservation and stop an hour or two to see the Indian and the ponies? That is fine. Fine when, in sak her in that dress.

She halted her eyes, hemitered her nose, changed her dress, came into the kitchen.

Theresa Jump, proud clumsy and unteachable, Sabra herself rolled and served the pie-crust and sweetmeat low salad, and though this novelty was not a great success, the intimate act of serving it was quieted Sabra, She handed the girl off at six, after the dishes were done. Wearily she began to set the house in order, but Yancey came home to a confusion of chairs and squashed pillows, a splotched color of perfumery and coffee, a litter of cake crumbs, bits of sandwich rolls, and crumpled tea napkins. His huge frame moving about the cluttered sitting room made these four rooms remarkable room ridiculous. The disorder of the household irked him as it always did. Sabra, relieved now that her guests was free to pour out upon him all the pent-up words, misery and shock of the past few hours. Blindly she began. Upstairs, Donna, Cim, Yancey—all gone. Then up and sprawling room, the dirty dishes of the dinner, the open drawers of the desk, the open garments, the litter of writing, what will people say?—no use trying to make something of yourself.

Yancey, usually so glib with questions from this or that newspaper man, eager of poetry, said little. He did not seem shy to sudden her into a lethargy of sympathy. He worked in the Wigwam office and had not been home since breakfast. He could yi a case of ripe mute calm—a calm that was more than a drunken tramp printer. Even Donna Sabra, who usually made him feel like a dissolving bottles and bottle down like vaporized gas, was not to be reached. Yancey sat there, protected to Yancey.

"She can't make a newspaper man out of that kid," he said. "Not in a million years. Newspaper men are born, not made. Cim, he just naturally. It takes two, at least, to make a newspaper office. He was born without an arm, or something. You can't grow it if you haven't got it."

"I know it," said Yancey, sensibly. "But I had a try."

For the first time a rival newspaper flourished in the town of Osage. The town was scarcely large enough to support two daily papers, but Yancey's political attitude so often was at variance with the feeling of the territory politicians that the new daily dispelled and discontent though it was, and owned body and soul to territorial interests, achieved a degree of popularity.

Sabra, unable to dictate the policy of the Wigwam with Yancey in charge of the office, had to content herself with the management of its mechanical workings and with its incredibly few important social and club columns. Osage swarmed with reporters, correspondents, lodges, Knights of This and Sisters of That, the Federation and the Twentieth Century clubs began to go in for Civic Betterment, and her tongue wagged in consequence. Sabra was safe from cackling and attractive females in their hats and cloaks and eyeglasses demanding his name signed to their articles and with a contribution. Whatever you feel that you can give, Mr. Hefner, of course, as a free woman and citizen."

They planted shrubs about the cinderstrewn environs of the Santa Fe and the Katy depots. They agitated for the immediate paving of Fawn Beach's avenue (it wasn't done). The families of the Easter Star, the Elks, the Lodge Sisters of Rebekah, Daughters of the Southwind. They even tried to get Wigwam office with bottles to be printed about temperance and the church societies, strangely enough, they were lukewarm. Longer said to their faces freely if Yancey and not Sabra were there to receive them. Sabra knew more politics than her own set encountered in office hours. Her cleverly made luncheons were tarty charming. He could no more help it than he could stop breathing. It was almost functional with him. He made the street, commonplaces, middle-aged women of Osage, who were royal—and seductive. He fattened them with like the ox fattens in bowed them to the door, their eyes glistening, their cheeks flushed, on their departure, to promise their carefully worded notice and throw it on the floor. Sabra, though she was busy at short work of the visiting Venuses and Rebekahs, was always on hand if necessary, carefully rewrote it.

"She ain't right," he would groan at monday dinner. "The office was full of Venuses this morning. Like a swarm of overfed bees."

Sabra was at the level of many of these Bernreuter movements. Also if there could be said to be anything so formal as society in Osage, Sabra Cravat was the leader of it. She was the first to mortify the ladies of the Twentieth Century Culture club by serving them Waldorf salad—that abominable mixture of apple cubes, chopped nuts, whipped cream and mayonnaise. The club fell upon it with little cries and murmurs. Thereafter it was served at club meetings until Osage husbands, returning home to supper after a day's work, and being offered this salvage from the feast, would pinch it sadly with masculine contempt for its contents and rear, "I can't eat this stuff. Fix me some bacon and eggs."

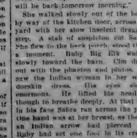
From this culinary and social triumph Sabra proceeded to pineapple and marshmallow salad, the recipe for which had been sent by Dunkin in the East. Its indirect effects were fatal.

When it again became her turn to act as hostess to the members of the club she made her preparations for the afternoon meeting, held at the gloomy hour of half-past two. Refreshments were brightly served at four. With all arrangements made, she was comfrinted by Ruby Big Elk with the astounding statement that she was a great Indian festival day (September, 1889). The room darkened and said that she must go to the reservation in time for the Medicine ceremonies.

"You can't go," said Sabra, flatly. Midday dinner was over. Yancey had returned to Sleeping. Cim was lounging in the hammock on the porch.



Yet This Thing Was to Her Way of Thinking, Monstrous.

For answer Ruby turned and walked with her stately, fretfeting step into her own room just off the kitchen and closed the door.

"This ends it. That girl has got to leave."

"What girl?"

"Ruby. Twenty women this afternoon, and she's going to the reservation. They'll be here at half-past two." It was rather tiresome, but Cim, surprisingly enough, seemed to understand.

"That so, told you a month ago."

"Told me what? How do you know?"

"Because she told me she told you, ever so long ago."

"Maybe she did. She never mentioned it again. I can't be expected to remember every time the Indians give one of the powwows. I told her she couldn't go. She's to those getting ready. Well, this ends it. She needn't come back."

She flounced into the kitchen. There stood a mild-mannered young Indian girl unknown to her.

"What do you want?"

"I am here," the girl answered, composedly, "to take Ruby Big Elk's place this afternoon. I am Cherokee. She has gone to camp." She glanced hilarious and white checked gingham kitchen apron of the hour behind the door and rolled it over her head.

"Well!" gasped Sabra, relieved, but still angry. "Well, you tell Ruby Big Elk when she saw Cim blinking up the two flights of stairs to the attic bedroom that Yancey had bought. She must run out and tell him before he goes. I'm glad he was clearing out. She liked to have him around. Of the two, I often afternoon coming was due.

Hollow eyed, opened. The girl came out. Her appearance was amazing. She wore a dress of white doeskin fringed at the straight hem and neck, and as soft and pliable as velvet. Her hair was plaited in two long sleeves, yellow were freely beaded in brilliant colors. Her moccasins were also embroidery than beading. On her feet were moccasins in ivory dress and a necklace of bear's claws. She was the robe of a princess. Her dark face was calm. Sabra, in her astonishment, forgot to be angry. She seemed to glow in contrast with the garment. Almost unconscious of her interest, almost beautiful.

"Hello, Theresa Jump. . . . This is my work this day. I have told her, I will be back tomorrow morning."

She walked slowly out of the house by way of the kitchen door into the yard with her slow insolent draggling step. A stab of suspicion cut Sabra. She flew to the back porch stood there a moment. Ruby Big Elk walked slowly toward the barn. Cim drove out with the phaeton and ponies. He saw the Indian girl coming toward him in her doeskin dress, the eyes down, unmoved. He lifted his head as though to breathe deeply. At that look in his face Sabra ran across the yard, one hand was at her breast, as though an Indian arrow had pierced her. Ruby had set one foot in its creamwhite moccasin on the buggy step. Cim held out his free hand.

Sabra reached them, panting. "Where are you going?"

"To drive Ruby out to the reservation."

THE POSITION OF AGNES WINTERS

By Fannie Hurst

A CHILD named Ruth attained years of age, with hair in a yellow braid over each shoulder, and a forlorn hope from that bespoke poverty, regarded her mother with eyes dilated in appalled amaze as her parent adjusting with rage stood hands a small room table in a small room and hollowed out.

That "No" had deeply rooted her gleanings. It was a "No" that went back and back into the recesses of memory.

It was a "No" addressed to Mrs James McHue.

The mother of the girl in the tow blue frock, Agnes Winters, had worked in the McHue household as a domestic servant for a period of thirty years. There were dark-blue glasses across the eyes of Agnes Winters but they did not prevent her from looking intently at the face of Mrs. McHue.

The McHues was a big household of forty-room affair with five acres of rose gardens. Garage for ten cars. Gardeners' cottages and a house that of some fifteen servants.

"The position of Agnes Winters in that household was a good one in chambermaid and personal maid to Mrs. McHue. There was a French girl who officially occupied the latter capacity, but Agnes did the mending and the fine hankwork, and the ostensibly of millions on Mrs. McHue's elbow fingers and handkerchiefs.

The mother of Agnes Winters had worked for the mother of Alice McHue in almost the same capacity. It was there Agnes was born.

Alice McHue established her household with a high, efficient hand. She was accustomed to money, always had been, and with the manner born of one accustomed to the best of everything. She established the great establishment along lavish but strictly business-like lines. There was no waste in the McHue household. The servants were given good and sufficient food, but food of a different grade than that of the household. Their quarters were warmed in winter, but in a lower temperature than the house proper. Only a night Agnes Winters had sat in her small room with the sleeping child, and face wrapped in her coat and a candle lighted on the table for, the warmth it gave off.

The servants on the McHue estate remained for two decades. Wages were high, comparatively speaking, and their children were permitted to attend, free of charge, the great Mc-Hue school which were endowed on an endowment fund contributed by an ancestral McHue.

Agnes Winters had remained in the McHue service until her death for that reason. After her death, she left in a sort of dull apathy, also contributed by the estate to Mrs. McHue, who had discovered in her a talent for the most minute and finely detailed embroidery. For years, now Agnes had been fifteen and sat of the McHue affairs, Alice McHue had worn lingerie that was the delight and admiration of her women friends. The silken McHue table linen, napkins, tea cloths, doilies were the subject of comment.

"Museum pieces!" exclaimed the guests, eyeing through lorgnettes the indescribably minute handiwork of Agnes.

If she had had the initiative or aggressiveness Agnes, as she had so often been told by her associates, could have made large sums of money at her art embroidery.

But Agnes detested the work. The process of picking with a splinter of needle through the cambric of fine silk was maddening to her nerves. Thumb-work tortured her body and more than that, it battered her eyes. Agnes came to be bad night after night in bursting, torturous headaches.

Against these headaches, Mrs. McHue supplied spectacles, ground out from a prescription written by a long line of eyes pioneers and investigators. They relieved, but did not cure.

And so, on and on through the years, Agnes Winters, protesting occasionally, but in the main resigned, continued to occupy the little room in the attic and the sewer in burdware.

When she was twenty she married one of the gardeners, Morris Monahan was an architectural gardener and had learned his trade from old Ameerion who had taken him to Italy, his wife a thrift, good-natured fellow, said as if by contrast, seemed to admire in Agnes Winters the demure,

Inventive Minds Never at Loss for Subject

In spite of the many shows that lay claim to being the greatest on earth, no exposition or entertainment had the same right to the name that has the international patent show in Chicago last. Here were collected the models of all manner of inventions. And inventions, in the profession, the scrapbooks of the hobby of perhaps three-quarters of all Americans and of at least a good half of mankind in the

The fertility of mind, the ingenuity and the manual skill represented in the Chicago exhibit are positively staggering. Even when the creations have no real use, even when they prove to be actual, fallacies practice to be fallacies, even when they at once stick to absurdity, these inventions and things to tease our curiosity and create our admiration. Consider merely the things mentioned in the news article—a motorcycle powder puff, a special sort of suspender buckle, an improved form of rubber boot, a new type of bathrobe, household soap, a piano that extends the feet instead of, a motoring car wheel. What dogged patience and fanatical zeal must right in the humblest that has and what mad hopes!

The urge to add something to the stock of reality to create something new and unique, useful and valuable is one of the most basic and powerful urges. One has only to look at the inventions of the past, listed in the everlasting catalogues of "articles," "implements" and "tools" to appreciate what has been produced. Yet these are only the successful inventions, the marketable and salable ones, a tiny fraction of the machines, devices, patterns and designs that have been studied, devised and put forth with unflagging belief in their virtues. Even among those who do not attempt actually to invent, the desire to be busy-ing with such work crops up from time to time.

Don't try to look so rich that you have to hand up on a dull street.

LIFE'S LITTLE JESTS

DON'T KNOCK

"American inventors cause American life. Hence they are called Yankee Americans," said Irene Tommy whose interest in inventors has recently been quickened by the arrival of a talented new relief. "If they fixed abroad the ordinary household they'd find less sales in rome.

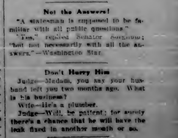
"I know an American couple who went to live in a French village. I was but one day in Paris and raised him how he liked French village life.

"Fair, said he.

"Has you talked on any of your neighbors?

"No," he said. "But I'm going to if I miss any more of my word."

VOICE TOO STRONG



"That weak little fellow no look sees now a superintendent and can throw him sooner."

"Does you believe Bobby voice is too strong for him to throw?"

Catching It Either Way

"What fellow Doubtless Jay got a severed, sweeking look. His to home is any position to do his fresh work here?" asked the president.

"No," grimace Pat manager. "I know the answer to his actions. His wife has order on him to destroy more of furs and other luxuries. Now he is standings to the mash."

"Then I guess he done catching it either way," said Sir.

Ah, Boy!

Bobby—Its surprising how many men you know without wife. How many do you think you can keep on the string?

Flatley—I really don't know. dont. How many men there?

THE REMEDY IS WITH THE PEOPLE

Taxation has become one of on most pressing national, state and local problems. It deserves more popular attention. The time has come when the burdens of taxation threaten the livelihood of the people, the stability of business, the very perpetuity of government. Just recently a government has failed in England because its people have been put hopelessly into debt.

The reasons taxes have soared so rapidly are apparent. We had a prosperity spending orgy during the World War and afterward. Extravagance got into the blood of the American people. Recent events have cooled that fever in individuals, from necessity. But the resources of the government are still overdrawn. Taxing bodies have unlimited control over everybody's property, and the instinct of that hayrel has not been rosalled.

Public officials are not primarily to blame for those mounting public expenditures and taxes, except in so far as they fail to see to it that a dollar in value is secured for every dollar in expenditure. They are brought about as the result of local and personal organized demands. In these demands general considerations are lost sight of, each group believing that it is well to get everything possible while the getting is good. Many of those who complain most loudly about high taxes are among those whose demands have made those high taxes inevitable.

Property government is doing more and more in support of education, roads, police protection and in fulfillment of other duties of government to the people. Public expenditures grow rapidly enough in meeting the proper demands for increased public service. We do not want to go back to the mud roads and log school houses of our forefathers. On the other hand we do not want to go broke trying to do things on too costly and extravagant a scale.

If the stories of hardship imposed on farmers, home-owners, mercantile concerns and industries by reason of taxes becoming almost confiscatory could be told it would be a startling tale. It is possible for government through excessive taxation to bankrupt the people, destroy their prosperity, undermine the very security of orderly government.

What is the answer? Only one is possible. Those who bear the brunt of taxation should be organized so that their demand will influence the action of public officials and make them understand that they will be protected in resisting unwise demands, and curbing extravagance in using tax money, and will be punished if they fail to offer resistance. And those who bear the burden of these taxes are not merely the taxpayers, but all those who pay rent or bear in any other way the cost of their own living, into which taxes enter as a fixed charge.

Without regard to political, religious, occupational or factional affiliation on organization should be effected in this and every other county, in order that the light of day may be put on the taxation situation and present and future abuses stopped. Such an organization should not be dominated by selfish light-wads opposed to all public improvements. It should have enrolled in it every citizen who feels concern for the future financial and moral solvency of his community and country. By such a large and influential body and such controversies as those now going on almost everywhere could be scrutinized, and the facts determined in the light of public interest rather than of personal or political advantage.

NO DOLE FOR THE UNITED STATES

Great Britain's government faces a deficit of $600,000,000. It has got to be made up. Reckless expenditures are at fault. Dules for the unemployed and other social activities alone total the $600,000,000.

American citizens of a socialistic strain, or with an intense desire to embarass the administration at Washington, are advocating loading the United States down with a dole that, once started, could end only in financial disaster. Partisan Democrats of Congress are urging it. Insurgents, self-styling themselves Progressives under the leadership of Senator Norris of Nebraska, fully intend to call the federal Treasury to the extent of untold millions, even billions. Engaged in this movement is the governor of Pennsylvania, Gifford Pinchot.

Great Britain has snuddled itself with a tremendous financial burden, and because it has done so it finds itself in a most demoralizing situation. The United States cannot enter upon a similar experiment. Taxation would have to be increased to alarming figure. And not for a year, but continually.

Relief for the unemployed must be had. Food and clothing and shelter must be provided for all sufferers. But the problem is that of individual states and of individual communities. The spirit of sacrifice on the part of those who can afford to help with contributions must be maintained at all costs. Were it understood that Congress would take over relief that spirit would quickly disappear. Always the federal government would be expected to assume the expense. The government can help in the way of organization, and Mr. Gifford has hinted by it of a great deal with tireless energy. Si ces are falling in behind him. Relief associations are reporting to him. Conditions must and can be met. But never from a dole from the government. That would be ruinous.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

A CRITICAL SITUATION

There seems to be one logical way to remedy an overproduction problem, and that is to stop producing more than can be used.

Along with agriculture, the oil industry and copper and silver mining have had overproduction which has made important commodities next to valueless.

After failure of voluntary "conservation" movements in the oil industry to remedy the overproduction menace, Oklahoma and Texas have taken the bull by the horns and, through the action of their legislatures and governors, have put radical measures for shutting down oil wells and thereby securing control of an abnormal situation.

Mining executives, with copper selling at 7 1-2 cents a pound and silver at around 25 cents an ounce, and surpluses piling up to the greatest figures on record are struggling with a situation as difficult as the oil industry. They are seeking ways and means to increase consumption or bring production within the bounds of demand.

The situation is critical for both the mining and the oil industries, and vitally affects thousands of employes and industries, both directly and indirectly.

Local, state and federal governments are also vitally affected because of the decline in tax revenue from these industries when they are unable to operate on a normal basis and their properties and products decline in value.

THE NAVY'S CIGARS

The discovery that naval vessels in Boston Harbor have stocked their commissaries with cigars purchased in Cuba, has brought a protest from Mr. John Doyle, president of the Associated Cigar Manufacturers and Leaf Tobacco Dealers of America, to the senators of the nine large cigar-tobacco producing states. American cigars, he says, are superior to those found in any other part of the world as regards tobacco, sanitation, skill and economy of manufacturer Mr. Doyle was told by naval officials that the rule that the Navy shall purchase only American goods, provided the prices are reasonable, is applicable only to ships in ports of the United States. Such an interpretation, he says, leaves the Navy free to lay in large stores of many commodities outside the United States and return with them to home ports. He feels that this does not follow the spirit of the rule spending of Navy funds among the people who which is obviously intended to encourage the are taxed to supply them.

This seems only a fair conclusion, since the cigar industry is taxed—in addition to the ordinary taxes on a business—to the enormous sum of $400,000 a year in internal revenue levies.

"At a time when unemployment is still a serious national problem," Mr. Doyle says, "and when, though the industry is not seriously affected, many American cigar factories are working part time, it seems to me that we cannot neglect even such minor opportunities as this—which could be easily seized—to assure American taxpayers that the money they supply the Navy will be returned as far as possible to the country's agriculture and industries." He will first many to agree with him.

BETTER RADIO PROGRAMS

Real radio broadcasting is only about ten year old, yet the public has grown to accept it as an institution that has always existed.

Few people stop to realize how the National Broadcasting Company has put its millions back of its programs.

As a matter of fact the General Electric Company furnished most of the initiative that created the Radio Corporation of America. The National Broadcasting Company came along later as an operating unit in what the public chooses to call the "radio trust." And if that is a "trust" a good many radio fans believe there should be more of them.

Broadcasting has developed more rapidly than any other science in history. In less than a decade its voice reaches every spot in the world where there is a radio receiving set and an ear to hear.

So that it is not surprising that the big radio broadcasting companies are increasing their usefulness to the public. Only recently in this Union. The National hook-ups will be more complete than ever before, and the programs will be stepped-up in quality to give them a still greater appeal to the general public.

Every obstacle seems to have been placed in the way of the extension of radio broadcasting, but those who have watched the progress of events as they have been finally ground out through the Federal Radio commission hopper at Washington, have been impressed with the fact that nothing can stop its steady progress.

MAKE FIRE PREVENTION PERMANENT

Fire Prevention Week is to be observed this year from October fourth to tenth.

As in the past, a comprehensive program of education on fire prevention activities has been devised. Members of fire departments will conduct inspections and make talks to school children. Public officials will take part in the program and call upon citizens to participate. Newspapers will give the week publicity, in both news and editorial columns.

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

The great common people have short memories, as the politicians tell us, but it is a fact that their memories are not any shorter than those of the politicians, if as short. For example, we are hearing a great deal of noise from free traders and internationalists—the two terms are of course almost synonymous—to the effect that the depression was caused by our high tariff. Yet, as every one knows, our present tariff law was not enacted until months after the crash in the stock market and the setting in of the depression in virulent form. And as to the tariff which preceded the present one, it is to be remembered that under it we enjoyed the greatest period of prosperity ever experienced by this or any other nation.

Since the depression is world-wide, coming with a deflation of the kind which followed the ending of the World War, it is evident that it cannot be cured by the tariff any more than that it was caused by the tariff. And yet there can be little doubt that the new tariff schedules have helped some, even though in most instances they are not yet high enough to equalize the cost of production at home and abroad. Two industries which begin to show signs of coming out of the slump at this time are the textile and the shoe industries, and these are two which, it was expected, the new tariff rates would help.

In an address at Binghamton, New York, recently, Secretary of Labor Doak declared that the shoe industry in the United States is now operating on an average of ninety per cent and is the first to show definite improvement, and he added that "What I have said about boots and shoes applies equally to leathers, for before the present tariff act, vast quantities of leathers of various kinds were being imported into the United States to the detriment of our tanning industry, and that is another reason why our present tariff law protects the American tanning industry and its workmen." Mr. Doak noted also that the number of employes in the cotton textile industry increased notably in July over July, 1930, and he added that there has been a decided increase in the number of employes engaged in the manufacture of woolen and worsted goods "despite the decline in the number of employes in some other lines not protected by the tariff. Here is at least a part of the story concerning the new tariff and it is by no means a discouraging one. It is true that our foreign trade is lower than a year ago, but this is on account of lower prices and the decreased purchasing power in America and abroad and it is noteworthy that imports of commodities on which there are no duties have decreased as much if not more than the imports of those which have to pay a tariff, showing that the new tariff law itself is not responsible for the decrease in our foreign trade.

One commodity we are sure to hear something about in the coming session of Congress is oil. Independent producers from the Southwest are going to ask for a tariff on the importation of oil and oil products, stating that there is no use in their installing machinery, if the country is to be flooded with imports. The old cry of free traders will be raised to the effect that we ought to have cheap oil and take our own product for the fut-ry.

But the old argument is about worn out. Long before our oil reserves run out, there is little doubt that the nations of the world will be using something other than gasoline for motive power. In a 1,000 page book entitled "Petroleum" recently issued by Ralph Arnold and William J. M. Kennitzer, well known and reputable geologists, it is contended that there is now a 500-year oil supply in the United States. We expects the American people to be using gasoline for motive power that long? The book asserts that less than two per cent of the oil has been produced to date.

"This is a startling revelation," Mr. Kennitzer said, "and it carries unbelievable conservation propaganda that has constantly been put forth since the beginning of the industry.

"Just as startling is the fact that there has not been overproduction of oil in the United States. The huge reserves have been built up by fifteen per cent of cheap oil."

Here is the answer to the free traders again. They would have us use foreign oil and keep our own oil locked in the earth until it will be no longer of importance industrially. Another case of Europe and Asia first, Uncle Sam and his business to help the rest of the world.

Pertinent Paragraphs

The Labor unions of the country are leading the way toward the five day week, says a statement issued by the American Federation of Labor. William Green, President of the Federation, says the immediate adoption of a five day week is a necessary and conservative measure for unemployment.

THE PRESIDENT DEAD

The noble heart of President McKinley ceased to beat at 2:16 Saturday morning.

Early Thursday evening symptoms of collapse appeared to the practical eye of the surgeons, and throughout Friday, the decline was steady and marked.

"It's God's way; His will, not ours, be done," were the words of the President to his devoted wife, and "Nearer, My God To Thee," the gentle, kindly spirit of William McKinley went to God in whom he had always trusted. And from the minute the bullet tore through his vitals, he was brave to the finish, strengthened by a faith that could not be quenched. The chief statesman of the world went from earth with a Christian's hymn and a Christian's prayer upon his lips.

In the hall of fame the name of McKinley will be written with those of Washington and Lincoln! A great president and yet a gentle, tender character, one who could speak ill of none, nor needlessly tread upon a worm. A Christian gentleman, and one who loved his country and his countrymen.

God rest his soul!

And now, when we have done with weeping let us turn with clenched and mailed hand to the wolves and vipers which infest the country. Spare not one. Who utters words of anarchy does murder! The pernicious doctrine has been too freely promulgated. Let laws be enacted that shall make it a felony to hold meetings where anarchy is preached. If the victims whelps resist by word or act, kill them.

Because of our boasted freedom of speech and press, America has become a refuge for assassins, a normal school for the education of anarchy of such as he who robbed us of our President.

The people are yet weeping over the bier of McKinley and they can but briefly turn to salute the new chief as they watch the beloved form moving to the tomb.

We cannot soon forget our sorrow, but we must soon turn from the dead McKinley to the living Roosevelt, who takes up the burdens of the presidency.

There is no lack of confidence in the new President. A man of culture; a citizen of irreproachable character; an official of stalwart probity; a soldier of courage; a Christian gentleman and a true patriot, Theodore Roosevelt comes to the presidential chair equipped as no succeeding vice-president was ever equipped.

An civil service commissioner, as police commissioner, as assistant secretary of the navy, as governor of the imperial state of New York, and as a soldier, Theodore Roosevelt has had a training in public affairs that few can boast at his age.

The American people can trust Roosevelt. He is equal to the occasion and will fill out the highest hopes of the party that placed him in the line of possible succession.

That he will be an honor to his country and himself we firmly believe.

A dock will be built on the island, and a bridge built to connect it with the mainland. Much of the work will be done this fall.

A singular phenomenon occurred here today. At about eleven o'clock the river, in which very little current had been noticed, suddenly began running out with remarkable velocity, the water lowering fully a foot in fifteen minutes. The current ran out for half an hour with a rapidity never before seen, and stopped as suddenly as it began. Can anybody explain it?

THE MASSACRE OF THE IROQUOIS

The story of Sau-ge-mau's relentless massacre of the Iroquois who lived in a village on the extremity of Point St. Ignatius, nearly two hundred some 225 years ago, is recalled by the finding of any quantity of human bones in a sandy ridge a few rods beyond F. E. Hurlbut's fine residence. The ridge was opened for the purpose of getting sand for use at the furnace, and the bones were found in heaps, showing that numerous bodies had been rolled into a common grave.

The village numbered 200 inhabitants, and but 25 escaped the fury of Sau-ge-mau. These fled to the Island, secreted themselves in skull cave and there miserably died. Bones of both sexes, and of children as well as adults, have been found. Over the huge grave had grown a pine of nearly a foot in diameter, which the march of improvement cut down not very long ago. Tourists have carried off most of the skulls, those of children principally by our simpler hued guests. Nearly every skull was crushed in on one side as if done by a blow from the tomahawk.—St. Ignace Republican.

How to train BABY'S BOWELS

Babies, bottle-fed or breast-fed, with any tendency to be constipated, should thrive if they receive daily half a teaspoonful of this old family doctor's remedy for the bowels.

That is one sure way to train tiny bowels to healthy regularity. To avoid the fretfulness, vomiting, crying, failure to gain and other ills of constipated babies.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is good for any baby. For this, you have the word of Mrs. Ada Hall, thirty-seven years of practice taught him just what baby need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep them free from sour and feathy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and children. He attended over 3,000 births without loss of one child or mother.

Putting Election Adopted.

The constitutional convention provided for the indirect election of the president for five years through a board of electoral college, the indirect election of members in the provinces for six years, and the direct election of members of the lower house from the districts. This law all been changed. The president is now directly elected for six years, not to be eligible for reelection. The executive advisers are elected by direct vote in three groups of provinces, the terms of eight years, with half the seats newly filled every four years. The members of the lower house are also elected by direct popular vote, in four constituencies of three groups of departments, six in the Limarí Andes a cabinet is appointed by the president and is responsible to him.

The old constitution established the Roman Catholic church and prohibited other forms of public worship. The new constitution separated the church and state and did away with property qualifications for voters. All citizens over twenty-one years of age who can read and write and who register may vote.

An unusual feature of the Chilean government is its electoral calibration which must pass on the validity of all elections of president, members of congress. It consists of five members chosen by lot, one citizen from each presidency and the presidents of the senate; one from the presidents of the presidents of the Lower Chamber; two from members of the Supreme court; and one from the members of the Court of Appeals of the city where congress meets.

Chile may be superficially compared to Californ a with directions reversed. It stretches in a narrow strip with the Pacific on one side and a mountain range on the other and it embraces dry desert, a productive temperate region, and an area of moisture and cold. Whereas California is only 900 miles long, however, Chile is 2,700 miles in length. To correspondent with Chile in extent of latitude covered, California would have to extend on the north to a city twice as long as Mexico's Lower California and would have to extend north-ward to the lower tip of Alaska's "Panhandle."

Great Ethnic Differences.

Chile differs so much ethnically from the rest of South America as it does politically. It has had a greater proportion of northern European immigration than its sister states, largely German and British. The predominant strain is a mixture of Spanish and Araucanian Indian, a blending which extends through all social levels. The immigrants from southern Europe have come in, and like Greek Britain, Chile has working classes of its own blood.

The vast beds of sodium nitrate discovered in what is now northern Chile more than 100 years ago have meant much to the country economically during the last half century. But the perfection of processes in Europe to extract nitrogen electrically from the air, and the growth of ammonia products from coal distillation has greatly reduced the preferred position that Chile long held.

First opened up in 1830 when the region was under Peruvian and Bolivian ownership, the mining operations did not reach a great magnitude until after Chile annexed the territory in 1880. After that the world's demand for nitrates grew so great that by 1914 Chile was exporting between two and three million tons. The World war increased the demand, for nitrate is the chief raw material for explosives as well as for wheat and cotton growing, and Chile's desert supplies kept the guns of the allies booming.

If one would get a quick conception of the immensities, the lonely surroundings, and the richness of geological origin, shut the eyelids of San Francisco or Los Angeles down in the most beautiful inland portion of the valley of California, give the Sierra Nevadas seven feet more height and pile on them more generous caps of snow.

Santiago, with its towers and temples of a distinct individuality, is fairly comparable in size to Philadelphia and Boston. Among the splendid cities of the world only Madrid and Barcelona in the Old World and Boston, New York and Mexico City in the new, exceed it.

But it is not on size that Santiago relies for its location. Many travelers agree that it has the most beautiful and inspiring setting of all the great inland cities of the world. It is considered near the upper end of a mountain-rimmed valley, its snow only be 20 miles. Ten miles to the east the Andes rise to heights greater than Mount Ivel, presenting a towering wall always snow-capped. On the west is a lower coast range, and to the south stretches a level expanse of fertile farming land dimpled into large estates.

Park of Santa Lucia.

Santiago is built on the plain, but within it rises a 600-foot hill, covering several hundred acres, which has been made into one of the world's unique parks. Once nearly bare, the hill of Santa Lucia has been transformed into an enchanting modern blending of terraces of groves and flower beds, winding roads and trails, cascades, terraces, cut-rate theaters and observation kiosks. From its slopes one may obtain wonderful charming views, and from its top Santiago lies spread out in all its glory.

It is a city predominately of low, flat-roofed buildings, for the most of them like Lima's since it is all subject of earth and quakes. But for all that the old Spanish tile has taken on a loftiness that puts to trest of the West. There is a movement and love for that manifest touch of the tiffle-ment of Old Spain, and which at the same time stamps Santiago unmistakably a metropolis.

The axis of life in Santiago is the beautiful Alameda de las Delicias—"the tree-lined avenue of the delights," which elevates the city in two. Its great breadth of 200 feet is divided by four rows of stately trees. Down the center is the Paseo, a broad promenade, lined by many flower beds and statue-studded little parks, along which the fashionable carriages head their tramping charges. On either side of the Paseo are the tracks of the electric street railway, and further outside are two driveways. The Alameda is lined with many of the finest residences and public buildings of the capital.

The hour of fresh air comes this low-down on Santiago's delightful dilemma. Great crowds promenade on the Paseo and on the plazas each evening. Most of the dwellings are of the Spanish type with open courts in the center, in which much of the family time is spent. The street cars are double-decked, with the upper seats open. Those who wish to climb the slope and enjoy the view may pay a smaller fee than the passengers who ride on the lower level.

Now great cities are so fortunate as Santiago in regard to their water supplies. Sparkling pure cold water from the high Andes is available in abundance within a few miles. The city could grow to a community of many millions without being faced with any great difficulty this necessity for which some municipalities have had to reach out hundreds of miles. Through the city runs the Mapocho river whose floods were once a source of danger. Chilean engineers have tamed the river, however, confining it within a concrete channel, and it is now harmless.

Josh Billings was the pseudonym of Henry Wheeler Shaw, American humorist, born in Lanesborough, Mass., 1818. He entered Hamilton college, but soon went out West, where he worked on farms and steamboats, finally becoming an auctioneer. In 1858 he began writing, and in 1860 went to New York paper "an fizzs on the Mast, id Josh Billings," which was extensively copied. His most successful work was his "Farmers' Almanac." It appeared on the old Farmers' Almanac. He died in 1885.

Love's Emblem

Cupid is the name of the Latin god of love and comes from the root word cupido, meaning "passion" or "cupio," meaning "desire." The way of depicting the god of love with bow and arrow originated in the Fourth century B. C., when Praxiteles and Lysippus represented him thus in statues.

About Chile

Bathing Beach at Valparaiso.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE recent forced retirement of the president of Chile throws attention on some of the unusual features of the Chilean constitution and government.

The old Chilean constitution existed from 1833 until 1925 and was the oldest constitution of a republic in the western hemisphere except that of the United States, and one of the most permanent of the governmental principles of the United States and those of Europe. While it was not destined to last as long as the U. S. constitution, it did serve for thirty-seven years of practice taught him just what baby need to keep their little bowels active, regular; keep them free from sour and feathy. For Dr. Caldwell specialized in the treatment of women and children. He attended over 3,000 births without loss of one child or mother.

STAGE COACH TALES

By E. C. TAYLOR

The Congressman's Joke

TOM CORWIN, famous Ohio statesman and jugular satirist of a generation ago, has a keen sense of humor, and invective of his dark complexion, played a joke on an obsequious lackey keeper one time that was often related up and down the length of the National road and at Washington.

Time in his early days was a wagoner, a driver of freight wagon teams along the great east-west highway and the rallying cry of his friends in the campaign that elected him governor of Ohio was, "Hurrah for Tom Corwin, the wagoner boy."

Because of his dark complexion, Tom frequently was mistaken for a negro by strangers. At that time the race distinction was very much practiced.

Corwin, when he was a member of congress, he passed over the National road in a chartered coach in company with Henry Clay and other distinguished gentlemen, en route to Washington, D. C.

The party stopped one day at 42 old stage taverns, kept by Seneca Cossum at the foot of Town hill, in a place also known as "Hill's Hollow," 25 miles east of Cumberland, Md. Cossum was fond of entertaining guests and was particularly anxious to cater to those distinguished statesmen.

The tall form of Tom Corwin attracted his attention. He noted Tom's swarthy complexion and heard his companions call him "Corwin." He supposed he was the servant of the party. Cossum had met Clay before and knew him.

The party ordered dinner and then someone suggested drinks all around to relieve the ennui of travel and to sharpen the appetite for the coming dinner. Cossum hurried to his store room and produced a bottle of fine old cognac, the "limy" drink of the old yoke. The finest drink of the day was brandy and leaf sugar, flavored by a taper and burnt. Peculiar traditions had it that "if Lord Bramy couldn't serve a toast" in need of physical refreshing, the rare was lingering.

The servants old landlord produced this drink, and handed it first to the other gentlemen in Corwin's party. After each of the others had stepped up to the bar and been served, Cossum, in a patronizing way, offered a glass to Corwin, saying:

"Tom, you take a drink."

Corwin drank off the glass in an hilarious manner and returned it to the landlord with modest thanks. The others in the party saw what was transpiring and kept straight faces.

Dinner fresh was announced and when the party entered the dining room, they saw that a side table, after the custom of the time, had been set for their "servant."

Corwin went over to the side table and sat down, while the others gathered around the sumptuous feast at the main table. All by himself in the corner, Corwin enjoyed an excellent meal. They unanimously would call over to him.

"Tom, how are you getting on?"

Corwin would modestly reply:

"Very well."

Senators in those days were elaborate affairs, and this continued for nearly two hours. When all had satisfied their appetites, the landlord produced cigars, and passed them around to Clay and the others. Then he took one from the box and laid it on the "servant's" table.

"Take a cigar, Tom," Cossum said condescendingly. Corwin expressed his humble thanks, and went outside to light it.

Soon after the meal was over the coach was ready to depart, and the distinguished party said goodby to the landlord. Clay was the last to appear, and with him was the "servant."

"Mr. Cossum," Clay said, "permit me to introduce the Hon. Thomas Corwin of Ohio."

It took the Ratsbergs and landlord a long time to recover, and whenever Tom Corwin passed through after that the way grew the best in the house.

GENERAL INTEREST IN "QUEER" PEOPLE

Monstrosities Can Always Command Attention.

The public interest in freaks of nature seems always to exist undiminished unfortunate are exhibited to gaping crowds as an interest of any standing, says the following article from the New York World.

VOCABULARY INDEX TO MENTAL ABILITY

Vocabulary is a fairly reliable index to a person's mental ability, states Lewis T. Hyde, in an article "Speech Habits and Personality," in Hygeia Magazine. A man's response is considered the sum total of his reactions and his accuracy as a measure of thought, he declares.

Translations children who there to talk before the normal age have been found to have unsymmetrical brain convolutions and to be above average in intelligence test before school age. The children who learn to talk later than the normal period have been found to have small convolutions for any reason age and to be below the average in intelligence.

We are indeed a fickled people, says Mr. Hyde. We are like that we do love new gadgets. Boys and girls graduate from high school to join colleges and professional schools, and then go to work in some phenomenally. They have acquired the rudiments of knowledge in many subjects, but they do not know enough about any one subject to be more than a slovenly speaker in a slovenly manner.

"Thanks to our modern economic demand and standard, we are quite willing to accept the services of the type of mentality described and to accept the type of work which it is capable of performing. Thereby, chains are becoming almost as popular as body chains were 50 years ago and wages have been found in remote surroundings, shipping clerks and merchandisers of our standard of living.

Whenever some resistance of young citizens who are a very economic requirement are discovered by the press, the public is ready to call in the services of a psychiatrist. For the average citizen is not only a great mixer but a great mass of his is governed by and suggestion rather than any reasoning, and he seems to be nothing short of a dullard.

The pencil would supply itself from factories in Alaska, according to one of the industry as they investigating the possibility of supplying Alaska with pencils, the Forest service announced. A possible substitute for cedar in lead pencils is Pacific coast species the wood is light, straight-grained, soft-scented and of good color. Both cedar and incense trees are included in the 42 forms of quick climate changes.

The Election Bet

Former Editor Thompson was talking to a Chicago reporter about the world's energy economy.

"It's wonderful," he said. "The rush of everyone to be in at once a FA the time in the history."

"I'll drop in a matter to what is a friend me money every bet on the election," the reporter broke in, "and for quantity of bet."

"Not this time," the editor said, "is every very uncertain me. You remember the last election?"

"Why, yes, certainly, I'm not again."

"Then you are going to bet?"

"Not me again. It's not lucker enough. You see, I've got to get married."—Detroit Free Press.

Telling the Neighbors

The Hermits had had their house painted and redecorated. Miss Hermit on receipt of the bill, remarked to her husband: "Hermit, I wish we were going away for the summer! I would so enjoy telling the neighbors."

"Why, Hermit, where were going this summer? Where going with the money to go to Europe?"

"I don't know where we're going this summer," Hermit grunted, "but I'm determined you're telling her nothing about it."

Synthetic Sunlight

Experiments conducted in the Siberian laboratory have shown that synthetic sunlight, produced by ultraviolet irradiation is fatal to bacteria accelerates the effect of vitamins and increases the productivity of sugar secretion. The open air treatment of tuberculosis is also improved by artificial sunlight. Experiments on recently engineering natural sunlight are possible and have been successful in some cases. In the engineering of the light to accelerate the growth of plants has been found to be of paramount importance.

The Shock Cure

"I have the knowledge please forgive me," said the young physician to the patient in court."—Tyden Notenpunten.

O Well!

"Papa, what is the name of the new Venus, that was seen on the telescope you were looking at yesterday?"

"Bertha Lisa."

Bribed

"I hear Jenkins is doing well with his new enterprise."

"Yes, the neighbors all chipped in and pay him $2 a week not to play it."

BIGGEST TIRE VALUES bring RECORD SALES

CAR OWNERS have shown their appreciation of Firestone extra values by giving Firestone Service Dealers a record-breaking business. During May, June and July more car owners came into Firestone Service Dealers and Service Stores and bought more Firestone Tires than in any like period in history.

Firestone Tires with two extra cord plies under the tread and the patented process of Gum-Dipping with uniform quality and the Firestone name and guarantee on every tire give greatest safety and greatest values at no higher cost than special-brand mail-order tires, made by an unknown manufacturer who takes no responsibility for your safety or your service.—Firestone control every step in tire making with only one small profit from Plantations to Firestone Service Dealers and Service Stores.

Drive in TODAY and equip your car with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires—the safest, most dependable tires made.

TOO DRY AIR LEADS TO ILLNESS, DEATH

Inject Water Vapor Into the Home Atmosphere for Health and Comfort.

FOOD is of less importance to life than is air, according to research engineers of the Indiana Institute of Technology of Purdue University at Lafayette. Men can exist much without food, but the patient dies soon if deprived of water, so the air he weighs a normal man needs about six times daily approximately 31 pounds of air. This is of some importance when the weight of the food consumed daily by the average person. Also, it is more than ten times the weight of water one consumes.

The air one consumed about six days however we breathe it. Air is to the human what water is to the fish. If normal oxygen supply in water did not contain an adequate supply of oxygen, fish would live in the water. If humans an adequate supply of moisture, aside from supplying water, is unique with oxygen, the aerial envelope which does from being a vital role from the standpoint of health, comfort, or economy itself.

Air is colorless, tasteless, odorless, and, normally, moving air and in a broad sense stagnant air. If the air we live in is dry, moist and stagnant, it has a detrimental effect upon the delicate membranes in the respiratory tract. It causes these membranes to become dry and irritated. Instead of performing adequately to prevent health, they become victims of the diseases for which germs.

The accepted value of water moisture in a human that is any other vicinity is between 40 and 60 per cent. Health authorities are of the opinion that the dry damp whip, which is heard in heated homes and places of work is an immediate cause of respiratory disorders. If moist, soft moisture, artificial humidification must be resorted to. In the average six room house 5 gallons of water should be supplied daily. This will supply sufficient moisture in the home air to conserve health. It also insures comfortable temperature at moderate temperatures of 70 or 72 degrees.

Heat, this air is provided. By furnaces, at Grand Haven, was a business caller here the first of the week.

Mr. John Peiffer, of Lake Linden, is a visitor here this week.

"Substance" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Christian Science Churches on Sunday, September 13.

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible. "For wisdom is better than rubies; and all things that may be desired are not to be compared to it" (Prov. 8:11).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "Infinite Mind creates and governs all, from the mental monad to its infinity. This divine Principle of all expresses Science and art through His creation, and the immortality of man and the universe" (p. 508).

MILK ORDINANCE NOW IN FORCE

LOCAL DAIRYMEN ARE SATISFIED WITH REGULATIONS

Tuesday last the new ordinance relative to handling and sale of milk became a local law and so far as we have been able to ascertain, it is satisfactory to local dairymen, producers and the public.

The ordinance as passed by the city council made for a lengthy document, so much so that at first it appeared formidable. After reading, studying and analyzing the ordinance paragraph by paragraph together with their several subdivisions the new regulation grew less formidable and on true value more and more apparent.

Charlevoix dairymen have been progressive, their herds have consistently been improved, and at the same time the producer has kept abreast of the times in the method of handling their product, using the latest mechanical apparatus, following sanitary measures and as a whole delivering to the public the highest standard quality possible.

Therefore dairymen find nothing in the way of hardship for them in complying with the new ordinance pertaining to the handling and delivery of this staple product to their patrons.

H. G. Nebeling, associated with the local health unit, has been appointed city milk inspector, and in this duty represents the State Dairying department of which he is an official.

The ordinance in question follows closely in its text like ordinances adopted in most twenty-six of the largest cities in the state. Charlevoix being the first north of Cadillac placed on the accredited list by the state department, according to Mr. Nebeling, who will have full supervision of the work of local inspection.

Dairies are classified according with the provisions of the city ordinance and they are fully prepared to meet its conditions and will do so. In fact they have been consistently furnishing a quality of milk equal to and possibly better, than is required under the new regulation, therefore they are prepared, and have been prepared for a long time, to meet this or any like emergency.

To Entertain Here With House Party

Mr. and Mrs. Will E. Hampton arrived from Ann Arbor Monday afternoon to spend a week in their motorside cottage.

They will entertain a party of friends who came up from the southern part of the state for a week of fishing, golf and Charlevoix scene.

The "gang" consists of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Reilly, from Ann Arbor; Mr. and Mrs. Chas. W. French of Cadillac and Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Clement from Greenville.

Mrs. Hazel Raby and son Gordon contemplate spending the winter months in the south and with this in view they are leaving Charlevoix next Sunday and will motor leisurely southward with the state of Florida as their objective. Their final destination to be decided later, after viewing points of interest.

Mrs. Blanche Greenman, suffering from an attack of appendicitis, was taken to the Petoskey hospital last Thursday night. The following morning she underwent an operation which was successful, so much so that she is making a speedy recovery and will be around as usual within the next few days.

R. B. Armstrong Jr., returned to Cincinnati Wednesday, after spending the summer in Charlevoix with his parents, Dr. and Mrs. R. B. Armstrong.

Richard Lewis, former Charlevoix resident, now living at East Jordan was a Charlevoix visitor Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. D. O. Bondeman and son Donald, Jr., returned to Kalamazoo last Friday, after spending a short vacation at their cottage on the Belvidere Club grounds. They were here a short time early in the season at which time they arranged for some changes in their cottage, with this practically completed they returned late in the season for a short visit.

L. C. Hannah, formerly engaged in business here, more recently at Osceola, Mount, joined his family here Sunday and will continue in Charlevoix for an indefinite period.

Monday, September 21, is the date when Dr. Leahy the Optometrist will be at the Hotel Charlevoix one day only. The care of children's eyes a specialty.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong and son R. B. Jr., returned from a short vacation to Southern Michigan and Indiana Saturday.

CAPT. GALLAGHER INJURED SUNDAY

Captain James H. Gallagher entered the local hospital Monday, for treatment for injuries received when he stepped through an uncovered hatchway on the Marold II Sunday night. Examination of the Captain revealed many cuts, bruises, etc., covering most parts of his body, although no bones were broken or serious injuries sustained.

However that may be he is a mighty sore man both bodily and mentally on account of the careless-ness of some one, whose duty it was to see that the hatch cover was in its proper place.

JANET GAYNOR SUBMITS HER IDEAS ON ROMANTIC APPEAL

By JANET GAYNOR

Of all motion picture themes—success, mystery, romance, adventure, comedy and the rest—there is one that will always prove the most popular.

Romance, despite the shorties of the intelligentsia, has succeeded in wedding all history as the favorite pastime of screen fans. Perhaps a cynic would account for this on the grounds that we like what is most unattainable, and that for every ten who achieve success or adventure, only one finds romance.

There is more to this viewpoint than is at first apparent. Romance is undoubtedly the rarest thing in life. Most of us find some degree of success, many have an existence in which adventure and action play no small part, but few really encounter romance other than the juvenile "crushes" of our school days.

Consequently, although only a handful of us reach it, all of us dream of this emotional goal, and a romantic motion picture crystallizes the dream into something more tangible. A truck driver and a stenographer and a farm worker will be intrigued by a film mystery, amused by a comedy, enjoy a Western or an adventure picture—but a romantic production does more than this—it lifts them, if only every-day out, if but for an hour; it lets them respond to the vicarious thrill of a romance, that, for the moment, they themselves are living.

Here, then, is the secret of the romantic picture's triumph over its companions: It satisfies the hidden longings of its audiences to a greater degree than any other type of film.

To take an example from my own career, consider "The Heaven". While director Frank Borzage's war scenes in that picture were equaled at that time only by those in "What Price Glory" and "The Big Parade" very few, as I have discovered, remember them. The romance between Charles Farrell and myself comprises their principal recollection of the production—and this also seems to be the case with most of our subsequent offerings.

In our latest appearance together in "Merely Mary Ann" Fox picture opening next Saturday and continuing through Sunday at the Palace theatre, the romance between Mr. Farrell as an eccentric composer and myself as a servant girl in the boarding house where he lives, constitutes the motif of the story. Against a background of the dingy London establishment, and then of the Devonshire cottage, this romance carries the tale along, but with its rather unusual characterizations, will be found, I think, somewhat different from any of our earlier pictures together. Different, but no less romantic.

HUNTERS URGED TO SPORT TOGS OF BRIGHT HUE

With hunting seasons over the country already opening or fast approaching, game officials are issuing the warning that today hunters are often in as great danger as the game they hunt. Last season several states reported a record toll of deaths and injuries among hunters due to an increasing number of amateurs in the sporting ranks and the sometimes crowded condition of hunting areas, especially on holidays, according to a bulletin of the American Game Association.

Commissioner John H. Ross of the Missouri Game and Fish department has pointed out that of the 40 persons fatally injured while hunting last season, 30 were killed by their own or others' firearms—four by their own carelessness in crawling through fences.

Hunters are being advised to bundle their guns with great care, to hold their fire until they are positive they see what they think they see, to be aware of the accidental trick of shooting at moving brush, to be careful of forest fire and to dress conspicuously in painting togs of bright color, preferably red or white, to save themselves from being mistaken for a deer, a turkey or even a cottontail.

Last year several hunters died of fright, starvation and exposure, after being lost. Game officials, quoting experts in woods lore, advise that the first and most important thing for a person to remember when he believes himself lost is to stop where he is, compose himself, and calmly try to orient himself and then find his way out. Where the points of the compass are unknown, it is always safe to locate a stream and follow it down, as any moving bit of water will finally lead to human habitation.

If not confident of his ability to find his way out he should build a fire and arrange himself as comfortably as possible, discharge his gun at intervals, and wait for friends to come to his rescue.

ARRANGEMNTS FOR FREE CLINIC

Final arrangements have been made for the free chest clinic which will be held in the Health Unit Office 305 Petoskey Ave., at Charlevoix, September 30. The clinic hours will be from 9 a. m. to 12 noon and from 2 p. m. to 5 p. m.

Charlevoix county residents who are suspected of having tuberculosis will be welcome at the clinic for examination by Dr. J. W. Toan, chest specialist.

This health work is financed by an appropriation from the county supervisors and funds of the Michigan Tuberculosis Association, secured in the 1930 sale of tuberculosis Christmas seals.

Miss Grace Congdon, Children's Fund nurse, will have charge of the clinic.

Steve Hannah of Jackson visited his brother, L. C. Hannah a day or two early this week.

Mrs. C. C. Potter of Bellaire visited Charlevoix friends this week. She was accompanied by her cousin, Miss Mary McCloskey, of Windsor, Ontario.

A marriage ceremony in which Arthur Hoffman and Miss Nellie Jean DeVries were the contracting parties was performed at the M. E. parsonage Saturday evening by Rev. J. E. Lockyer.

Ed. Duell, representative of the Department of conservation, of Boyne City, was a business visitor here Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. Franklin C. Sears went to Detroit early this week to attend the national convention of the American Legion.

Miss Dorothy Hooker after spending the vacation period here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Hooker, returned to Ypsilanti Saturday, where she resumes her student work at the State Normal.

Attorney J. M. Harris of Boyne City was a visitor here Friday on business of a professional nature.

Charles Novak and son "Bill" drove to Ann Arbor Friday where Bill enters the U. of M. as a freshman. Mr. Novak returned early this week.

CLARENCE BISSELL FINALLY LOCATED

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bissell recently received a message from their son Clarence, whose whereabouts has been unknown for about three years from Fort Kamehameha, stating that he is in the army with the U. S. troops in the Hawaiian Islands. This is the first information received by the parents concerning the son since the last took his departure.

The boys disappearance was a source of anxiety to his relatives. This was heralded over the air via broadcasting stations without producing results. That he has finally reported his location, position and healthy condition creates a feeling of satisfaction with his parents, relatives and friends.

He is now serving as Private First Class of Battery "B", Fifteenth Coast Artillery at Fort Kamehameha, Hawaii, according to report made under date of Sept. 15, 1931 by the War Department at Washington, D. C.

Under date of Sept. 22, 1931 Mrs. Bissell received the following message: "Am doing fine, will write now. Hoping you are well. Your son Clarence A. Bissell, Fort Kamehameha."

NEW BARBER SHOP ON ANTRIM STREET

"Tom" Whitley opened up a barber shop at 125 Antrim Street last Saturday. The location is just a little off the main business district, in a good location and is receiving a patronage satisfactory to the owner.

Mr. and Mrs. A. F. Young of Boyne City, were visitors here Wednesday.

FARMERS REGULATE HUNTING, HUNTERS PROFIT BY SYSTEM

Although sportsmen consider the system of "hunting exchanges" being developed in Michigan by organized farmers to be the ideal hunting arrangement, the system actually was far from flattering to the sport, judging from a bulletin of the American Game Association.

Individual farmers, finding it impossible to enforce their "no hunting" orders against an annual flood of trespassers carrying and using their guns in a reckless manner, handled together, hired private wardens to protect the aggregate of their acres and agreed to adopt a ticket plan by which each landowner, his family and guests might hunt undisturbed on all the combined area. The game protectors were also assigned to see that every needful encouragement was provided for an increase of game.

Out of the desire for self-defense, mixed with the hospitality of the farmers, have grown the 16,000-acre Williamston plan for hunting and several other projects, where hunting is said to be more intense than ever before, yet game more abundant.

The farmers guests have been followed by women's organizations, which quickly offered their cooperation and have aided in restoration programs and in seeing that regulations were observed. The Michigan division of the Izaak Walton League is conducting two demonstrations in exchange territory to prove that game may be restored to abundance by natural means through the inexpensive improvement of wild-life food and shelter conditions.

So far the organized farmers, glad to be able to regulate hunters and hunting on their property, have ignored a new development in other states, which is placing game supply on a sound economic basis by recognizing it as a secondary farm crop on which landowners can profit through the sale of hunting privileges.

McNEAL-BELLINGER WEDDING EVENT

Mr. Charles E. Bellinger of this city and Alice McNeal of Boyne City were united in marriage at the home of the bride's father, James McNeal, Sunday afternoon at 3:00 o'clock. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Guy E. Smock and witnessed by a few relatives of the contracting parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Bellinger will reside on Pennsett Street where Mr. Bellinger recently completed a nice new bungalow type residence, preparatory to the auspicious event which removes him from the class of single Charlevoix bachelors.

Mr. Bellinger is one of Charlevoix's young business men and his bride a popular resident of Boyne City.

Immediately following the wedding ceremony they built up their residence at the Pennsett Street home where they will be at home to their friends.

The best wishes and congratulations of a host of friends are extended to them for future health, happiness and prosperity.

Mrs. George McCabe, Mrs. Flora Loth Minn, Mrs. Charlin Galster and John Rose are enroute today to Quebec to visit a Catholic shrine where many cures for persons sick and injured are reported. They are making the trip by car via the two Sous and will be away about ten days.—Petoskey Evening News.

Mr. and Mrs. Adam Pfister were called to Detroit Saturday on account of the serious illness at their son Joseph Pfister. No information had been received here as to the nature of his illness nor any information other than the message calling his parents to Detroit.

Register of Deeds, Frank F. Bird, reports the sale and transfer of the William Heise farm south of Charlevoix, to John Fratzke of Chicago.

Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Alden, who occupied the cottage located at 202 Michigan Avenue for the summer, left for French Lick Tuesday, where they will spend a month or more before going to their home in New Orleans for the coming winter.

Dorothy Withers returned to Lansing a few days ago to resume her student work at M. S. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bridge and children, returned to Midland early this week after spending the week end here with relatives and friends.

OLD TIME FRIENDS ENJOY PLEASANT EVENING WITH MR. N. A. SHORES

Old time friends, eleven in all, met Thursday evening with Mr. N. A. Shores at the Shores residence, 403 E. Dixon Avenue, when Mr. Shores celebrated his 68th birthday anniversary. The meeting was in the nature of a surprise event, managed by "Grandma" Shores, carefully planned and successfully carried out, making for a complete surprise for Mr. Shores and a most pleasant evening for the guests at the function, who were present to do the honors as a pioneer citizen who through the years has rendered conspicuous and highly regarded service.

The guests with Mr. Shores enjoyed a well appointed and elaborate dinner prepared and served under the supervision of Mrs. Shores, and served at 6:00 p. m.

Following the dinner a general visit of auld lang syne was indulged in, by those present and all tendered their congratulations to their long time friend and neighbor over his many years of life—after a period of four score and four years.

LOCAL LAUNDRY MAKES CHANGES

Ivan Holmes has taken over the interest of Elmer Conklin in the laundry business and hereafter will be associated with E. M. Sorensen in the work formerly conducted under the firm name of Sorensen and Conklin.

The deal is a recent transaction, and went into effect as soon as the transfer was consummated.

So far the organized farmers, glad to be able to regulate hunters and hunting on their property, have ignored a new development in other states, which is placing game supply on a sound economic basis by recognizing it as a secondary farm crop on which landowners can profit through the sale of hunting privileges.

DRIVERS MUST HAVE LICENSES

LICENSES DATED PRIOR TO JAN. 1, 1925, VOID AFTER NOV. 1

Now that the time is at hand when all drivers of passenger automobiles and all drivers of commercial vehicles not requiring chauffeur licenses, are about to renew their operators' license on dated prior to January 1, 1925, would make application for new operators' license, the manager of the local branch of the State Department wishes to satisfy such applicants that they previously, rather than the necessary two next charge for postage) can be handled at his office in connection with those operators' licenses.

When applying for a license, it is FIRST necessary to obtain either a money order, express order, cashier's check or CERTIFIED personal check in the sum of one dollar, payable to "Secretary of State." As the regulations require that a separate remittance be attached to each application, getting one money order or check to cover two or more license applications is NOT permissible.

After he has met with the date of your present operator license before applying for a new one. This rule is rubber stamped on a line in the upper right hand corner of the license—usually only the last two figures of the year being given, as "12" for 1912; "13" for 1913. If this date is not earlier than January 1, 1925, it is not necessary that you make application now, as you have until May 1, 1932, to secure your new license and possibly until Nov. 1, 1932, depending on the date. If, however, your present license is dated before January 1, 1925, or if your license has been lost or defaced so as to be illegible you should apply for a new one at once, so as to have it by November 1, 1931.

Applications for operator license must be signed by the person of a notary. Applicants from the rural routes will be required to have their applications signed by the sheriff or under-sheriff; those from the three cities of the county, by their respective heads of police or other chief; those whether sheriff or chief of police is charged under the new law with the duty of sending these applications with the remittances to the State Department at Lansing. Individuals are not supposed to do this, as under the old law.

Instruction School For Arch Masons

Notices are being sent to members of Charlevoix Chapter No. 141 that a school of instruction for the benefit of Royal Arch Masons will be held at the Masonic Temple Wednesday evening, September 30.

Grand Lecturer Arrangement has been completed by which one of the most able workers in Masonry will be present to conduct the school. The session will be held at the meeting and assembly of the Petoskey Chapter will also attend under the direction of the Grand Chapter.

Masonry as it is practiced throughout the entire world was almost cut off by the possession of the British army under General Gage. When the revolution was being discussed in the Virginia convention, Washington arose and said, according to the account as handed down by John Adams:

"I will raise one thousand men, subsist them at my own expense, and march myself at their head for the relief of Boston."

The Congress met first in the City Tavern in Philadelphia, elected Peyton Randolph president, and adjourn-ed to the State House. Here the re-sisting sessions were held. Washington attended the second Congress (1775) in his military uniform, and it is possible that he went to the first Congress similarly attired. This seems to have been his way of following that he was prepared for the chair which every day appeared more certain.

Washington's diaries record nothing of the discussions which took place in Congress. The tall, distinguished and famous Virginian, however, made a lasting impression on his fellow Congressmen. He must have participated effectively in the deliberations of the Congress for Patrick Henry, when asked who was the greatest man in the body replied: "If you speak of eloquence, Mr. Rutledge, of South Carolina, is by far the greatest orator; but if you speak of solid information and sound judgment Colonel Washington is unquestionably the greatest man on that floor."

The spirit of Congress seems to

PASTE THIS IN YOUR HAT

When political prophets ask you to vote for some new "sure cure" for the woes of the nation, read the following sane remarks by David F. Houston and thumb your nose at the professional vote seeker who thrives at the taxpayer's expense:

"Some tell us that we are in a new economic era and that old economic laws no longer apply. They told us this in 1929. They tell us the same thing in 1931. What they say now is just about as valid as what they said then.

"They tell us that our institutions are menaced, that we must speedily revolutionize them; and, that, if we do not, something will get us, the revolutionist, the communist, or the soviets.

"They tell us that capitalism has failed or is on trial. They do not tell us what they mean by capitalism. Perhaps they do not know. We know that capital is wealth saved to aid labor in the production of further wealth. That does not seem to be a very dangerous thing. In fact, it has been through hard work, producing wealth and through self-denial resulting in saving wealth that much of the progress of the world has come.

"It is foolish to contrast capitalism with communism or socialism. There is no such contrast. The real contrast is between liberty or freedom and individual initiative and tyranny.

"Some of them, ignorant of what is really going on in Russia but much impressed by propaganda, tell us that Russia has a plan and that we must have a plan. They say that we must have a national plan and national planning board. What folly! What men, or group of men, in this country would know how to direct all, or many, of the leading activities of this great nation; and who is so innocent as to assume that, if they were to make a plan, our people would follow it, unless they could be made slaves? Certainly the Federal Government could not formulate or direct such a plan. It is none too successful in discharging its constitutional functions. It cannot even run a routine business like the Post Office without a huge deficit."

PROBATION FOR RECKLESS DRIVERS

A probation system for supervision over drivers whose licenses are restored after having been revoked is now being established in Connecticut.

Under the proposed system, a personal guarantee will have to be given, before a license is returned, that the offender will not repeat his offense. Each individual case will be thoroughly considered and the license will only be returned when officials are satisfied that circumstances warrant it. The driver will then be followed up, and reported upon so that if he again manifests reckless or negligent tendencies his license may be again taken back.

It is said that the main flaw in the plan is difficulty of enforcement. But the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles believes that it can be done satisfactorily. He says, "The safety of the public demands that new and more seriously applied methods of direction be used, and more severe standards of fitness on the highways be adopted . . . . Safety can only be attained by better selection, thereafter supplemented with a corresponding system whereby persons can be checked and whereby those persons who by dint of appearance, education or other means have succeeded in acquiring operator's license where there really exists some defect in temperament, physique or adaptibility can be detected and removed."

Other states will watch the Connecticut experiment. And if it is successful, there will probably be strong public demand for it elsewhere.

EXCESS TAXES OFTEN FAIL IN PURPOSE

Taxes, when they reach a certain limit, often fail of their purpose. Instead of producing more revenue, they produce less.

This is proving true of gasoline and automobile taxes. When levies grow too high the public simply does less driving.

In contrast to this are the states of Missouri and New Hampshire where income from the gas tax has increased without raising the rate. Missouri, where the tax is fixed by law at two cents a gallon for a decade, had the largest May collections since the levy was first imposed, in 1925, and the collections for the first five months was nearly $250,000 greater than for the same period in 1930.

Gasoline tax collections have increased so noticeably in New Hampshire that the Nashua Telegraph has suggested that the next session of the legislature might seriously consider reducing the tax.

It may be that states benefit more from a reasonable tax than from an excessive one which causes automobile owners of modest means to leave their cars home.

SEEKING NEW COPPER MARKETS

In technical achievement the copper industry has made epochal progress in the last five years. This is particularly true in the matter of obtaining more metal from a given amount of ore, and in making use of low grade ore.

However, this technical advancement has been largely the cause of the overproduction that is now perplexing the industry. What copper needs, according to many authorities, is progress in marketing methods to parallel its scientific progress. Production must be curtailed to within the limits of demand, and new uses for the metal must be developed and new commercial markets explored.

Several copper producing states are now strongly advocating that their copper license plates be made of copper with good legitimate arguments for its use. Similar help could be given coppermining, with public benefit, along many lines.

MORE COOPERATION FOR AGRICULTURE

In the opinion of many qualified observers agriculture is facing the most difficult period in several decades. And most of the causes behind the farmer's problems are beyond his control as an individual.

The solution to the present crisis may be found in one word—cooperation. Farmers must work together more closely, and so must farm organizations. Overproduction of crops and low prices for farm products require mass treatment, if a cure is to be effected.

The advantages of cooperative production and selling is well shown by the Dairymen's League Cooperative Association of New York, a leader in its field. It is estimated that in ten years its members have received $107,200,000 more for their milk than they would have received otherwise. The league, by controlling about half the milk of its territory, is able to meet distributors on equal terms and assure the dairymen a fair deal.

Agriculture, like industry, has passed far beyond the stage where the individual producer can do business on his own. He must prepare to meet changed conditions with changed methods. Cooperation—another word for mass action—is the way out.

THE TEACHER AND THE CHILD

Some 850,000 school teachers have returned to active leadership of some 26,000,000 children. Those teachers are not only instructors of the mind. They are guardians of physical health as well. More and more does the school share with the home responsibility for preserving child health, and for establishing health practices among individual children. Indeed, because what "teacher says" often carries more weight than parental admonition, the schools are recognizing their duty in building sound bodies to house eager young minds as a sacred trust that must be carried out even if personal sacrifices are entailed.

Not the least important health habit which teachers in our public schools can establish among children under their care is the frequent washing of hands, especially before meals. Children from the avenues and children from the alley alike get smudgy hands—hands that may pass on to others the organisms of communicable disease. Not every school is equipped to provide soap, towels, and running warm water, but the ingenuity of a few enterprising teachers has shown that even without satisfactory washrooms, this necessary health practice can be made a regular feature of the school program. Excellent suggestions are often brought from home by the children themselves when the teacher puts sufficient emphasis upon clean hands.

The schools of tomorrow will all permit—nay, encourage—every child to keep decently clean with adequate facilities provided from board funds. Improvements must come.

RETAINING GOOD LOOKS

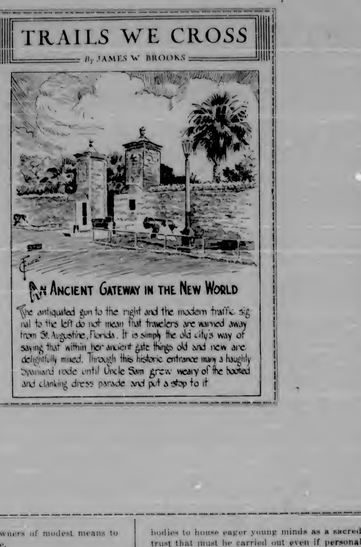
The normal girl who has been reasonably favored by nature and heredity should have no difficulty in attaining good looks and retaining them, according to some authorities. That is, if good looks are to be regarded as a native quality and not to be confused with the smartness and chic pursued by many of the fair sex by the medium of clothes and subtleties of makeup.

Those directing the home economics division of University Farm, Minnesota, pointed out to the girls attending the Junior Short Course, that there are nine qualifications for a good looking girl. They list first, a clear, smooth skin, with rosy cheeks and red lips. Other important details are bright, clear eyes without circles under them; smooth, supple hair; strong white teeth; firm, strong muscles; good posture when sitting and standing; normal weight (from seven to ten percent above average weight is considered normal); happy, good natured disposition; and energy to keep the whole thing going.

The recipe for good looks and incidentally good health calls for three general practices. First, girls should do their sleeping at night, getting at least nine hours' sleep, with windows open.

Second, play or work outdoors at least an hour every day.

Third, eat three regular meals every day. Milk or cocoa or some other substitute should be used instead of tea and coffee; vegetable other than potato instead of a second helping of meat; green vegetables or salad daily; fruit dessert at least once a day instead of pie, cake or pudding; oranges or tomatoes every day; fruit, milk and cereal for breakfast instead of griddle cakes, sausage and coffee, fruit, bread and butter or milk, for lunches. Between meals instead of candy, pop, hot dogs or ice cream.



NATIONAL AFFAIRS

By FRANK P. LITSCHERT

Compared with the nations of Europe, America is decidedly young. Unless we have lost all our youthful qualities during the past two years, which is doubtful, we can expect our national vigor and optimism, now under a cloud, to reassert itself sooner or later, and pull us out of the depression. The remarkable ability of Americans to come back can be illustrated by the present example of Arkansas and especially by the present example of Arkansas, and especially by the little community of England, in that state.

A few months ago, it will be remembered, when the drouth was on on the Mobile West, all sorts of pessimistic stories came out of Arkansas. It is true that conditions were bad, but it now becomes evident, that the predictions for the future were undoubtedly too pessimistic. It will be remembered how many of our busy statesmen asserted that Arkansas must have something like the dole, that the state was in a bad way and might never recover, without assistance from the federal treasury for feeding the suffering the citizens of the drouth stricken belt.

Well, the Red Cross took care of the stricken drouth regions and months have rolled by. Arkansas is again blooming like a rose. Only a few days ago, writes Thomas Fauntleroy in an unusually interesting article in the Sunday New York Times, the little community of England, scene of bread riots a few months ago, held a country-wide celebration, the occasion being the shipping of a truck load of food from the people of the country, to the unemployed in a neighboring Oklahoma community. Mr. Fauntleroy adds that the community has the most remarkable crops within the memory of the oldest inhabitants and pessimism and despair have given way to optimism and hope for the future.

Reports to the Department of Agriculture in Washington confirm the glowing picture of the change of conditions in Arkansas. Instead of devoting all their time and soil to cotton this year, the citizens of the drouth stricken area paid some attention to the raising of food crops. Okra and okra organizations in various parts of Arkansas during last winter catered on campaigns urging the people to plant food crops so that there would be plenty to eat in the winter of 1931 32. The people responded, and the result is that Arkansas people have food for themselves and some to spare for their less fortunate neighbors. Even better is the fact that Ajax has come a long way and that the people are now confident of the future. As Mr. Fauntleroy put it, "All this is aside from a bumper cotton crop. Thousands of new dollars are on the Memphis board at the lowest figure since 1915 and the prospect of a still lower figure is in sight, the people are not digging up their gardens and their hearts of hay and corn."

Best of all, the people of Arkansas have brought about an improvement in conditions without relying on any form of the dole. It is true that money was borrowed for seed, but the people are paying this back, and have already repaid the Red Cross. The citizens of Arkansas have relied after all not on the Farm Board or benefits from the public treasury, but on their own industry and fine American spirit. The two United States senators, and the Arkansas delegation in Congress have a right to be, and doubtless are, proud of the gallant and successful fight put up against adversity by their fellow citizens during the past twelve months.

They attempted to gain an entrance to his premises and after being warned away, had to be knocked down several times by a soldier's one arm. One of them was floored twice, the last time so severely that he cried like a baby. Another made a savage attempt to cut Williams with a knife, cutting his shirt. They all went away feeling badly. Some of the men had better leave that one-armed soldier alone. He learned how to fight a good many years ago, and he hasn't forgotten how.

W. S. Johnson who recently purchased the schooner Willard A. Smith at U. S. Marshal sale, has sold her to an east shore party. The deal is about on her last legs. She was built by Ben Campbell and S. M. See at this port 31 years ago. She has had a good many ups and downs in life.

The Annual Reunion of the Charlevoix County Soldiers' and Sailors' Association.

The old soldiers took Charlevoix last Friday morning and occupied it without hindrance until Saturday night. There were about 125 of them and many of them were accompanied by their families. A number of W. R. C. ladies and a delegation of Sons of Veterans were also among the invaders. Comrade M. J. Stockman was the officer in command of the forces and acquitted himself like a Major General.

The occasion was blessed with charming weather and every feature of the two day's gathering was a grand success. On Friday they were turned into a mess hall below and barracks above. The mess hall under the magic touch of the W. R. C. was nicely decorated and the rear waterroom was turned into a complete kitchen, with every appurtenance for cooking. All was under the direction of the W. R. C. and well did they perform their duty. At every mess the tables were loaded and all were provided.

The days were passed as all reunions of this nature are, in full enjoyment of the occasion. Friday a dress parade was about the only noticeable occurrence during the day. In the evening Lewis Grand Opera House was full to overflowing to witness an entertainment provided for the veterans. Prof. Enos welcomed the visitors in a speech full of earnest patriotism, which was fitly responded to by a veteran. Musical and other exercises constituted a portion of the program and the Young Ladies Zouave Company under Capt. Hyink, gave their drill. The roster of the company is as follows: Misses Ruth Bowen, Allie Brink, Maud Scott, Macy Tullock, May Brown, Carrie Brown, Artie Kanagy, Maude See, Lillie Carpenter, Bertha Pierce, Mattie Brink, Nellie Nettleton, Edith Mason and Georgie Irwin. Their fine appearance and precision of drill elicited hearty applause and an encore. The young ladies also appeared in line at the dress parade, and were the attraction of the day.

Saturday occurred another dress parade and review in which also the Zouaves participated and gave a street drill. But it was not all dress parade and review for the old boys. They came for fun and they had it most royally. A vegetable wagon was raided on Bridge Street. As a part of the fun which followed the employee of said grey-haired veteran throwing a cabbage at the head of the driver, received the memories of "marching through Georgia."

Friday night, along toward the morning hours, the editor of this paper was awakened in his bedroom, and daylight disclosed the fact that seven chickens had disappeared. Saturday afternoon, Comrade John H. Backenstone of Advance was apprehended as the ringleader of the foragers, and duly courtmartialed. D. C. Nettleton, of Baxter Post was also arrested by a provost's guard on information setting forth that "Between the hours of five and six a. m. he had feloniously and with malice aforethought milked Willard A. Smith's red-speckled cow." The court martial convened at five o'clock at the opera house, with Comrade Duell of Boyne City as President and Wm. Mears, of Boyne Falls as Judge Advocate. The culprits were brought in under a guard and plead guilty. After the usual formalities, the overwhelming evidence against them, they were duly convicted and sentenced each to wheel a bushel of corn to Bridge street in a barrow to the music of the "Boyne March." The sentence was carried out to the letter, but the guilty wretches smarting under their punishment, seized the complaining witness, the editor of this paper, and jointly inflicted the same punishment upon him, with variations that could only have been conceived in a depraved and vicious mind.

Thus the two days passed. Everybody enjoyed the pranks of the veterans and everybody freely gave them liberty to kick just as high and yell just as loud as they wished. The confounded old reprobates are entitled to all the fun they can get. Their line at the dress parade was not a thing of beauty. It would have made a West Point lieutenant laugh. Their heels were not together and their shoulders all out of line. Forward marched they, but not forward back. They marched like a Good Templar's lodge and some of them limped. But these limpers are dispelled, and a thrill touches the heart of the patriot when he remembers that these are the men who scaled the steep of Lookout Mountain; withstood the onset of Pickett's legions at Gettysburg; and with Chancellorsville, Antietam and Mission Ridge; that marched from Atlanta to the sea, and helped whip the Confederate army at Appamatox. These men were a part of the grandest army that ever trod the earth. They can have our chickens and milk our cows.
